Tibetan Buddhist Birth-Stories: Extracts and Translations from the Kandjur.—By HON. WILLIAM WOODVILLE ROCKHILL, Assistant Secretary of State of the United States of America, Washington, D. C.

Now that a translation of the complete Pāli text of the Buddhist birth-stories is in course of preparation under the editorship of Professor E. B. Cowell, it seems opportune to call attention to the material contained in the Tibetan canonical books (Kandjur), and to its importance in connection with such a work; and though I cannot here do more than touch on the subject, the labor which even a cursory examination of the numerous and ponderous volumes of the Kandjur entails is so great and existing indexes to this work are so imperfect, that I am led to believe that even a brief notice of the subject may prove acceptable.

By far the larger number of Jātakas I have come across are in volumes III. and IV. of the Dulwa (Vinaya) section of the Tibetan Kandjur. Some of them have been translated into German by Anton Schiefner of St. Petersburg, and published in English by W. R. S. Ralston in a volume of Trübner's Oriental Series entitled "Tibetan Tales derived from Indian sources" (London, 1 vol., 8°, 1882); a few have been rendered into English by the present writer in his "Life of the Buddha" (London, 1 vol., 8°, 1884); and twenty-two are found in the Tibetan canonical work entitled Djang-lun, "The Sage and the Fool," published in German translation by I. J. Schmidt (1 vol., 4°, St. Petersburg, 1843); but with the exception of these and of a few scattered about in various works, the great bulk of Tibetan birth-stories still remains untranslated and, in fact, unknown.

Although I have, at various times, read the whole Dulwa, I can at present only find my notes on the third and fourth volumes. For the convenience of students, I have, in the following index, not only noted the untranslated stories, but also those translated by Schiefner and myself, the page-references being to the copy of the Kandjur in the British India Office library. I have also appended brief references to the various Jātakas which occur in the Djang-lun, in Schmidt's edition of that work.

Among the untranslated birth stories in the Dulwa I have chosen five from the fourth volume, and one from the sixteenth volume of the Mdo (Sūtra); and though perhaps they are not the best to be found in it, I offer them as fair specimens of this style of stories, in the hope that they may prove of interest.

1. Jātakas in Volume III. of the Dulwa.

P. 1-4. The Buddha was the crafty Padmaṃai rtsa-lag (Padma-bandhu?), who killed his mistress Bhadrā and then accused a hermit of the crime.

P. 4-5. The Buddha was the Brahman Lnga-brgya-chan (Pancha-gataka?), who believed in the teachings of the Buddha Vipacyin, and who, together with his five hundred fellow-students, ate spoiled barley, because the Buddha said he should not eat delicate food.

P. 5-14. The Buddha was the Brahman youth Bla-ma (Ut-tara?), son of Shing sala-ch'en-po lta-bu nyagrodha (Mahāsāla-nyagrodha?), who was presented to the Buddha Kaḡyapa by the potter Dgaḡ-skyong (Nandapāla?), and who became a Bhikṣu.

P. 14-15. The Buddha was a physician, who had not cured a sick boy because he had not been paid for his previous services.

P. 15-16. The Buddha was a fisher boy, who found pleasure in seeing two other fishermen hurt themselves.

P. 16-17. The Buddha was a strolling athlete, who broke his adversary's back in a fight.

P. 177-178. The Buddha was the younger son of King Brahmadatta; assisted by the younger son of the royal chaplain, he drugged the elder brother, so as to govern in his stead.

Besides these birth stories, in which the Buddha plays the leading part, this volume contains the following stories of a similar description, in which, however, only some of his disciples figure.

P. 62-63. A story about the Bhikṣus Kaphina, Cāriputra, and Māudgalyāyana.

TRANSLATION NO. I.—THE HIDDEN TREASURE.

Mendicants, in days of yore there lived in a mountain village a very wealthy man, who married a woman of caste equal to his own. After a while she bore him a daughter, and on the twenty-first day after her birth they had a great naming-feast, and they called her "Having-a-bracelet" (Gdu-bu-chan).

And then a son was born, and the father thought: "Since there is born to us a maker of debts and a diminisher of means, I will take merchandise and go to foreign parts." And he thought also: "This wife of mine is handsome and young; if I give her too much money on going away, she will spend it with some other man; so I will give her but very little money before I go." So he gave her a little money, poured the rest into a golden vase, the neck of which he tied with a necklace of pearls, and having hid it near the horse-ear tree¹ in the cemetery, he departed for foreign lands. There he gained great wealth, and he staid there and married a woman who bore him many children.

After a while his first wife with her two children became dependent on the work of their hands and the kindness of their relatives. So the children said: "Where is our father?"

"My son," the mother answered, "he is in such a country, in such a town, I have heard say, and he lives in great wealth; go to him, and if he gives you a little, you will be able to make a living."

So the son set out to seek his father, and when he had come to the town where he lived, and was wandering about the streets, his father recognized him and called to him and said: "Where did you come from and where are you going?" And the lad told him his history.

Then the father thought: "Of a truth, this is my son," and he embraced him and told him to let no one know that he was his father, and he showed him great affection. His other children said: "Father, whose boy is this?" "It is the son of one of my friends," he answered. Then they thought: "If he is so very fond of him, it can only be because he is his own child." So they commenced ordering him about, thinking he was a motherless boy.

Then the father thought: "Among haters there are greater and lesser ones, but these (other sons of mine) will seek an occasion to kill this boy, so I will send him away. But if I send him away with something, they will kill him on the way for his money; so I will give him something that no one (not even himself) knows anything about." So he told him: "If you dig intelligently and carefully in the east of the earth and in the vicinity of the horse's ear in the suburb of the village, measuring with a yोजना, you will find a part of my wealth ; give to your sister what is around its neck. This is yours, go your way."

On the road his half-brothers laid hold of him and said : " What have you got from our father ? " " Nothing," he answered them, " but this secret " (and he told it to them). " Our father has deceived him," they said to themselves, " we will let him go ; " so they let him go his way. After awhile he got back to his home, tired, worn out with fatigue.

His mother said to him : " Have you got anything from your father ? "

" Only this secret, but it is nothing."

" Son," she answered, " he has deceived you, you may seek the whole road, but you will find nothing."

" Mother," the son answered, " that noble man has not deceived me," and then he explained the secret. " Village " means the one where he was born ; " suburb " means where corpses are burnt ; " near the horse's ear " means horse-ear tree ; " near it " means just what the words imply ; " in the east of the earth " means to the east ; " to measure with a yojana " means as much as a yoke will measure off.

Having thus explained the sense of the verse, he went, as soon as it was dark, to the cemetery, and looking around, saw a horse-ear tree, and having measured a yoke's length' on the eastern side of it, he dug a little and found a golden vase with a strand of pearls around its neck. He picked it up joyfully, carried it home, and taking off the pearl necklace, gave it to his sister.

What think ye, Mendicants ? At that time I was the householder, and he who was then the son is now this doctor who rightly interprets my (enigmatical) thoughts.

TRANSLATION NO. II.—THE HERMIT AND THE ELEPHANT.

[DULWA, VOLUME IV., PAGES 277-278.]

Mendicants, in days of old there was a certain wild country where were no hamlets, but only groves, flowers, and fruit-trees of many kinds and pleasing to the eye, and also delicious springs. Here lived a hermit of the Kāṇḍika clan ; fallen fruit, roots, and water were his food and drink, and skins and bark supplied him with raiment, and the deer and birds used to come to his hermitage.

Now it happened one day that a she-elephant calved near by, but hardly was the calf born when the mother heard a lion roar ; so, filled with terror, she abandoned her young, after having dunged on it, and ran away.

After a while the hermit came out of his hut, and looking around he espied the new-born elephant without a mother, and his heart was touched with compassion, and he sought everywhere for the mother, but not finding her, he took the calf home and nursed and fed it as he would a child.

When (the elephant) had grown big, it hurt the hermit even in his dwelling, tore up the shrubs, stripped the branches off the fruit-trees, and did other innumerable wicked pranks. The hermit scolded it but it heeded him not. When its evil passions had shown themselves, he warned it, but it scorned him. After a while the hermit reproached it in the strongest terms, when (the elephant) rushed at him, killed him, and breaking through the side of the hut, ran away.

A god then spoke these verses :

"The vicious one, he who is always bad,
Is not a fit companion ;
So it was that in Kāuṇḍika's hermitage
The long-fondled elephant did evil.
"Kindness, food and drink,
Avail thee naught with a wicked one,
For surely in Kāuṇḍika's hermitage,
The elephant killed his holy friend."

The Blessed One then said : "Mendicants, what think you ? He who was then the hermit, the same now am I, and he who was then the elephant is now Devadatta, who then as now knew not his own ingratitude."

TRANSLATION NO. III.—THE UNGRATEFUL WREATH-MAKER.

[DULWA, VOLUME IV., PAGES 283-285.]

In times of yore, mendicants, there lived on a mountain a wreath-maker. His flower garden was on the farther side of a brook, and every day he crossed the stream to get flowers.

One day while crossing the stream he saw a perfect mango fruit floating down on the water. He took it and gave it to the gate-keeper (of the King); the gate-keeper gave it to the steward, and he gave it to the King, and the King gave it to his queen.

When the queen tasted it she was so delighted with its flavor that she said to the King: "Sire, I should like some more such mangoes." So the King said to the steward: "From whom did you get that mango?" "From the porter," he answered. "Well, tell the porter (that the queen wants some more)." So he told the porter, who said: "I got it from the wreath-maker."

Then the King said: "Sirs, call the wreath-maker." So, the King's men being summoned, he said to them: "Tell the wreath-maker that the King orders him to bring another mango from whence he got the first one."

Now, it is not right to disobey the orders of a sovereign of men, so (the wreath-maker) filled with awe, took some provisions, set out to look for mangoes, and came to where he had found the first one. On the side of the mountain he found a mango tree to which monkeys, but no man, had ever been. The wreath-maker examined the tree all around (and found) it could not be reached on account of a great chasm ; but he so much wanted the fruit that he staid there for many days until his provisions were all exhausted.

Then it occurred to him : " If I remain here without provisions I shall die. If there were only a little water (in the chasm ?) I might finally get up to the tree," and he clutched the rocks and tried to get over, but he could not reach the mangoes and fell in.

Now, the future Buddha (Gotama) had been born on that mountain as a monkey, and was a monkey-chief. It so befell (lit., through the power of fate it happened) that he and his band were on the mountain, and coming along that way he saw in what dire distress the wreath-maker was, and knowing both what he had done and the circumstances of the case, he tried to help him, and as no single one of the monkeys could get him out, they decided to make steps with stones and by this means pull him up. So little by little, as they piled up the stones, they raised up the wreath-maker until finally, utterly exhausted, they dragged him out.

In those days beasts spoke the language of men, so they asked him : " How did this mishap befall you ?" And when he had told them, the future Buddha thought : " Since it would be unsafe for him to go away without these mangoes, I will get him some ;" and this noble creature, ever desirous and willing to help others, notwithstanding his fatigue, climbed the tree, plucked the fruit, and the man ate of them as many as he wanted and took as many away as he could carry.

Now future Buddhas (Bodhisattvas) sacrifice themselves for all creation, and this monkey-chief sacrificed himself here. He said to the man : " Master, I am weary, I must rest me for a little while." " Do as thou wilt," he answered. So he lay down and went to sleep.

Then the man thought : " I am without provisions, but should I eat the mangoes what could I give to the King ! I will kill this monkey, take his flesh as food, and go my way." And so the cruel man, putting away all thought of the life to come, killed him with a big stone.

A deity spoke these verses :

" Succor and even miracles

As well as benefits and friendly talk (are naught) ;

Some men there are for whom

A service, once rendered, is forgot."

What think you, mendicants ? he who at that time was the monkey-chief, he I am now ; and he who was then the wreath-maker is now Devadatta.

TRANSLATION No. IV.—THE WOOD-CHOPPER AND THE BEAR.

[DULWA, VOLUME IV., PAGES 286-288.]

In times of yore there lived in the city of Benares a poor man who supported himself by selling wood. One day he rose up early in the morning, and, taking his ax and carrying-frame, started off to the forest for wood. On a sudden, rain began to fall, accompanied by violent wind. The man sought everywhere a place of shelter and went from tree to tree, but in each place the rain drenched him to the skin, so he left the trees and took refuge in a cave.

Now in this cave there lived a brown bear, and when the man saw it, he was frightened and would have run away, but the bear said to him: "Uncle, why are you afraid?" But the man was timid and held back in fear. After a while the bear pressed him to his breast with both arms and gave him a quantity of roots and fruit (on which the man lived).

The storm lasted for seven days without the rain-god stopping it; but when seven days had passed and the eighth day had come, the rain-cloud passed away. Then the bear, having looked all around the horizon, took a quantity of roots and fruit (gave them to the man), and said to him: "Son, the rain-cloud has gone, the storm is over, go in peace." The man cast himself at the bear's feet and said: "Father, how can I show my gratitude?" "Son," he answered, "tell no one of my whereabouts, and you have repaid me." "I will do as you request," and having walked around him (as a sign of respect), he bowed down before him and went away.

When he had come to Benares, he met a hunter on his way to hunt deer, who said to him: "Comrade, where have you been these last few days? When that sudden rain-storm set in, your wife and family thought you had been killed by some wild beast; they were terrified and have been in dire despair. Tell me, how many birds and deer did you kill during the seven days' storm?" And the man told him what had happened. Then the other said: "Tell me, where is that bear's den?" "Promise me," he replied, "that you will not, at some future time, go to the part of the forest in which he lives." And this the other promised him. But after a while the hunter beguiled him with the promise of two-thirds of the bear's meat (if he would go with him to its den), and having got his hunting-knife,¹ they started off for the woodland den of the noble bear, and after a while the ungrateful man said to the cruel one: "Here is the bear's den." And the hunter, so as to kill it, put fire in the cave.

Choked with smoke, sorrowful at heart, and his eyes filled with tears, the noble bear spoke these verses:

"I lived in a hollow in the wilds,
Nourished with roots, fruit, and water,
With kindly feelings for all beings;
To no one have I done evil;
But when the hour of death has come,
Then nothing can avail.
The desires of beings and undesirable acts Must needs follow the one the other,"² and with these words he died.

¹ Lam-mts'on or "road-knife," probably a big knife like the Gorkha kukree used for clearing a pathway through the jungle.

² The sense of these last two lines is not very clear, although there is no doubt as to the general sense of the text.

When the men had butchered him and finished dressing the carcass, the hunter said to him who had been the author of this crime: "Take your two-thirds of the meat," but he spread out his hands and fell flat on the ground, and when the other hunters saw this, they exclaimed: "Alas! Alas!" and throwing away their share of meat they went away.

Hearing that a great miracle had occurred, a crowd went out to where it had happened, and King Brahmadatta went out also. Now, somewhere on the mountain side there was a convent (sanghārāma), and King Brahmadatta, with wonder-opened eyes, took the bear's skin with the intention of showing it to the monks who inhabited it, and he went to the monastery, and spreading out the skin, he seated himself and placed it at their feet, and told them the whole story. When he had finished, an elder (Sthavira), who was also a holy man (Arahat), spoke these verses:

"Mahārāja, this is no bear.

It has the splendor of a Future Buddha (Bodhisattva).

Mahārāja, the three worlds

And thou may rightly pay it homage."

Then the King thought: "He shall be honored," and the Monks said: "Sire, show him homage, for he is a future Buddha of this world-period."

Then King Brahmadatta, his queens, sons, ministers, peasants, and the townspeople, all took sweet-smelling woods and went to the place where lay the body of the bear, and having collected in a heap all the flesh and bones, the King said: "Now put on it the sweet-smelling wood, and when you have done so, set it on fire." So they heaped up the sweet-smelling wood, and having shown great marks of honor to the remains, set fire to the pile, and after this they built a monument (ch'ärten) on the spot, and to it they fastened parasols, flags, and streamers, and here they made great offerings at stated periods. All those who took part in this great work reached heaven (svarga).

What say you now, mendicants? He who at that time was the brown bear, the same now am I; and he who was then the ungrateful man is now Devadatta.

TRANSLATION NO. V.—THE ELEPHANT AND THE JACKAL.

In days of old there was a great lotus-pond in a mountain country, where lived an elephant, and near by a jackal. Once upon a time the elephant went to the pond to drink, when the jackal came along and said to him: "If you do not want to have a quarrel, get out of my way."

The elephant thought: "If I should destroy this mass of corruption with my feet or my trunk or my tusks, it would demean me, for he is too vile; forsooth, his own filth will kill him. So he spoke this verse:

"I will not kill thee with my feet,
Nor my tusks, nor yet with my trunk;
The filthy one shall be killed by filth.
Thou shalt die then in corruption."

The elephant then said to himself: "I will give up the road and take a byway, for I doubt not he is following me;" so quickly he got out of the road and went away. But the Jackal thought: "A simple word from me has frightened him, and he has run away," and he went after him. Then the elephant, perceiving that he was near, threw at him with all his great might some dung, which hit him; and so he died.

What think you, mendicants? He who was then the elephant, the same now am I, and he who was the jackal, is now Devadatta.

TRANSLATION NO. VI.—GOLDEN-SHEEN (SUVARṆAPRABHĀSA), THE KING OF PEACOCKS.

[FROM THE CĪRIGUPTA SŪTRA, MDO, VOLUME XVI., FOLIOS 427-451.]

In days of yore King Brahmadata reigned in Benares; and his riches, treasures, and possessions were vast, and his store-houses were full. Now King Brahmadata had a wife whose name was "Incomparable," and she was handsome and stately, and her face was exceedingly lovely. This princess was very dear to the King, and he satisfied her every whim and fancy.

At this same time there lived on the southern slope of Mount Kāilās, the chief of mountains, a king of the peacocks, "Golden-sheen" (Suvarṇaprabhāsa) by name, and with him was a retinue of five hundred followers. His limbs were glossy, as was also his body, and as a jewel was his beak. Where'er he went, he was recognized as the grandest of all peacocks.

On a certain occasion, this King of peacock's cry was heard in the middle of the night within the city of Benares, and every one in the city talked of it. The wife of King Brahmadata happened to be on the terrace of her palace when this sound was heard, and so she questioned the King. "Sire," she said, "whose is this voice so sweet, which causes such emotion and delight?"

The King answered: "Princess, though I have not seen (its possessor), from its accents it must be that of Suvarṇaprabhāsa, the king of the peacocks, who lives on the southern slope of Kāilās, the chief of mountains (the rest as above). Then the Queen said: "Sire, I beg you to have this king of peacocks brought here." King Brahmadata said: "What is the use of my seeing him going through the air?"

But the Queen said: "Sire, if you do not let me see this Suvarṇaprabhāsa I shall die."

So King Brahmadata, who was very much in love with her, was touched; and he said: "I will send out all my huntsmen and bird-charmers." So King Brahmadata had all his huntsmen and fowlers called and said to them: "It is reported, sirs, that on the southern slope of Kāilās, the chief of mountains, lives the peacock king, Suvarṇaprabhāsa, whose limbs and body are glossy, and whose bill is like a jewel: go and net or snare him and bring him here. If you succeed, it is well; but if you fail, I will have you all put to death."

So the hunters and fowlers, fearing for their lives, took their nets and snares and started for the southern slope of Kāilās, the chief of mountains. When they reached there, they stretched their nets and set their traps in the place where the king of peacocks lived, so that nets and hair nooses were all around him, but though they waited there seven days, pressed with hunger, they were unable to catch the peacock king.

Finally the king of peacocks, touched with compassion for them, came and said to the hunters: "Ye men of violence, why stay ye here, though pressed by hunger?" They answered him: "Here is the reason, O peacock king; King Brahmadata has ordered us saying: 'Go and take with your nets and snares Suvarṇaprabhāsa, the peacock king, whose limbs and body are glossy and whose bill is like a jewel, and who with five hundred followers lives on the southern slope of Kāilās, the chief of mountains. If you bring him here, it is well, but if you do not, you shall all be put to death;' so we, fearing for our lives, have come here to try and capture you." The king of peacocks said: "Men of violence, you cannot take me with snares and nets; but if King Brahmadata wants to see me, let him have Benares swept, sprinkled with scented water, decorated with flowers, let him have white awnings stretched, flags hoisted, and censers fuming with incense, let him get ready chariots with the seven kinds of precious stones, and then if in seven days from now he come here surrounded by his whole army, I will go of myself to Benares."

When the hunters and fowlers had heard what Suvarṇaprabhāsa, the king of the peacocks, said, they returned to Benares and went to King Brahmadata, to whom they said: "Listen, Sire! we departed hence with nets and snares and went to the south side of Kāilās, the chief of mountains. We stretched our nets and set our snares all around the place where the king of peacocks was living; but though we waited seven days, gnawed by the pangs of hunger, we were not able to catch him. But the king of peacocks, filled with compassion, came and spoke to us, asking us what we were doing staying there though suffering with hunger. When we had told him, he said to us, 'If Brahmadata wants to see me,' etc. etc. (as above).

When King Brahmadata had listened to the hunters and fowlers, he had the city of Benares arranged as the king of the peacocks had directed (the rest as previously), and with fine chariots ornamented with the seven kinds of precious stones, and surrounded by all his army, he went to the southern slope of Kailās, the chief of mountains, and the king of peacocks, Suvarṇaprabhāsa, riding also on a chariot made of the seven kinds of precious stones, uttered a cry which the whole army heard. So then King Brahmādatta, delighted, his heart filled with joy, did homage before Suvarṇaprabhāsa, king of the peacocks; he bowed down before him, made him offerings, honored him, and then they went back together to the city of Benares. When they arrived at the gate of Benares, again he uttered his cry, and it was heard throughout the whole city; and throughout the city, men, women, boys, and girls all rushed to the gates.

Then King Brahmādatta again honored the king of the peacocks, did him homage, made him offerings, honored him, and going to his palace, he sought the Queen and said to her: "Princess, the king of the peacocks, Suvarṇaprabhāsa, is coming to your dwelling."

Now King Brahmādatta made himself (daily) offerings of fruits and flowers to Suvarṇaprabhāsa, king of the peacocks; but it so happened, however, that on a day, the King, being busy, thought; "Who can make the offerings to Suvarṇaprabhāsa, the peacock king?" and it occurred to him that Princess "Incomparable" was clever and very learned, and that she could do it. So King Brahmādatta had his wife called and said to her: "Princess, please make the offerings to Suvarṇaprabhāsa, king of the peacocks, in the same way as I have done;" and King Brahmādatta's consort herself offered to the king of peacocks flowers and fruits.

Now it happened that on a certain occasion the Queen committed adultery and was with child; so she bethought herself: "If this king of peacocks does not speak, King Brahmādatta will not hear of this, and so will not want to kill me." So this woman gave the king of the peacocks poisoned food and drink; but the more she gave him, the healthier he looked, the more beautiful, the more pleasing, the more resplendent he became, and the Queen was filled with astonishment. But the king of the peacocks, Suvarṇaprabhāsa, cried out to her: "Thou rogue, thou rogue, I know thee! Thou didst think because thou wast with child by another man and this bird knows it, if he does not talk, the King will not hear of it and will not put me to death. So thou gavest me poisoned food and drink, but thou canst not kill me!"

On hearing these words, the Queen fell on her face, and having lost a great deal of blood (lit., arterial blood), was stricken down with a severe illness which caused her death, and after her death she was born in hell.

He who was the king of Benares is now Cāriputra, and I was the king of the peacocks, "Golden-sheen."

On the following pages I give a collection of those fragments of the Čātyāyana Brāhmaṇa¹ to which parallel passages exist in the Jāiminīya Brāhmaṇa. The first and larger part of the article (nos. I.—X.) is made up of those cases in which there is an almost verbatim correspondence between the two Brāhmaṇas, while the second part (no. XI.) comprises those passages which in regard to phraseology or subject matter show more or less similarity only. The almost verbatim correspondence of the Apālā legend in the two Brāhmaṇas was noted as early as 1879 by A. C. Burnell, who soon after his discovery of the MSS. of the Jāminiya Brāhmaṇa sent a brief communication about its contents to the London Academy (Feb. 8, 1879; vol. xv., p. 126), which he closes with these words: "Were it not that the Jāminiya consider the Čātyāyana school to be different from theirs, I should identify this new Brāhmaṇa with the Čātyāyana Brāhmaṇa quoted by Sāyana. Probably the difference between the two schools, if there really be any, is very small. I find the legend of Apālā (quoted by Sāyana in his Commentary on Rigveda viii. 80 as from the Čātyāyana Brāhmaṇa) word for word—except a trivial v. l.—in sections 220-1 of the Agniṣṭoma book of the new Brāhmaṇa. I have not been able to search for the other passages quoted by Sāyana as this Brāhmaṇa is of great bulk."

The question here raised by Burnell as to the relationship of the two Brāhmaṇas is difficult to answer with desirable accuracy. Identity, for the reasons given by Burnell and below, is out of the question. As for the degree of relationship, we could argue more safely if an intimate knowledge of the sources from which our present Brāhmaṇa collections have flowed and of the manner in which they were composed enabled us to give just and proper weight to both similarities and discrepancies. As it is, the danger seems to lie in over-valuing the former, many of which owe their likeness to the fact that they were taken from the same sources, such as pre-brāhmaṇic itihāsa-collections,¹ or theological manuals; for the parallelism of ritualistic passages, not only in Brāhmaṇas of the same school, but also in those belonging to different schools,² plainly suggests the fact that, aside from their legendary material, the compilers of our present Brāhmaṇas drew a certain amount of theological and ritualistic matter from existing collections.

While thus the striking resemblances of the passages given below under nos. II. to X. must not be overrated in estimating the closeness of relationship of the two Brāhmaṇas, due weight must be given to the following two points.

First, the occurrence of ČātB. fragments which cannot be paralleled at all in the JB.: such are Sāyana on RV i. 105. 10; Āpas-tamba ČS. x. 12. 13, 14; Commentary on ĀpČS. xiv. 23. 14; Lātyāyana ČS. iv. 5. 18 with the Commentary; Commentary on TMB. iv. 5. 14 and 6. 23; and other passages mentioned below. The quotation at ĀpČS. x. 12. 13 recurs in Yājñikadeva's comment on Kātyāyana's ČS. vii. 5. 7.

Second, the dissimilarity of the two versions of the story of Dadhyañc the Ātharvaṇa.

The Čātyāyanins, according to Sāyana on RV. i. 84. 13, told a story about Dadhyañc as follows:

At the sight of Dadhyañc the Ātharvaṇa, while he was alive, the Asuras were undone. But when he had gone to heaven the earth became filled with Asuras. Thereupon Indra, not being able to fight with the Asuras, seeking that sage, heard: "He hath gone to heaven." Then he asked the people here: "Is there no part of him anywhere left here?" They said to him: "There is that horse-head with which he announced the honey-wisdom¹ to the Agvins. But we do not know what hath become of it." Indra answered: "Seek it." They sought it. Having found it in the Çaryanāvanta, they fetched it. In the back part of Kurukṣetra indeed flows a river Çaryanāvanta by name. With the bones of this head Indra smote the Asuras.

The text, as quoted by Sāyaṇa, runs thus:

ātharvaṇasya dadhīco jīvato darṣanenā 'surāḥ parābabhūvuh. atha tasmān svargate 'surāḥ pārṇā prthivy abhavat. athe 'ndras tāir asurāḥ saha yoddhum ācaknuvāns tam ṛṣim anvicchan svargaṁ gata iti guḍrāva. atha papraccha tatradyān ne 'ha kim asya kim cit pariṣiṣṭam aṅgam asti 'ti. tasmā avocann asty etad āgvaṁ ṣiṛṣaṁ yena ṣirasā 'gviḥhyām madhuvidyām prābravīt tat tu na vidma yatrā 'bhavaḍ iti. punar indro 'bravīt tad anvicchate 'ti. tad dhā 'nvāiṣiṣuh. tac charyanāvaty anuvidyā 'jahruh. çaryanāvad dha vāi nāma kurukṣetrasya jaghanārdhe saraḥ syandate. tasya ṣiraso sthībhir indro 'surāḥ jaghāna.'

The JB. version is as follows (iii. 64):

Then follows SV. ii. 265=RV. 1. 84. 15 with explanation.

It will be seen that the two versions do not at all closely agree in their phraseology. I add the translation of the JB. passage:

Dadhyañi the Ātharvāṇa was famous, learned in sacred lore. Whenever any of the Asuras espied him from afar then these were laid low and lost their heads. And he went up to heaven. Indra pushed by Asuras and Aṅvins¹ said: "Where, pray, is Dadhyañi the Ātharvāṇa?" They told him: "Sir, he went up to the heavenly world." He said: "Is nothing left of him here?" They told him: "There was that horse's head with which he proclaimed divine wisdom (?) to the Aṅvins; but we do not know what became of it." "Search for it." They searched for it. "Searching for the horse's head that was hid away in the mountains, he found it in the Çaryanāvant." Çaryanāvant indeed is the name of a river in the back part of Kurukṣetra. Having found it, they fetched it and gave it to him. He always held it in sight of the Asuras. Whenever any of the Asuras espied him from afar, then these were laid low and lost their heads. He, indeed, slew ninety Asuras by means of these bones. Thus he is rival-conquering, victorious. "Indra the invincible slew with the bones of Dadhyañi ninety foes." He overcomes ninety, slays his hateful rival, who knows thus.

There are two other stories, the story of Trita, and the story of Tryarūṇa, common to the ÇātB. and JB.; but we are unable to make similar comparisons here, because in each case we have not the precise language, but only the gist, of the ÇātB. version.

The first of these is the story of Trita's rescue from the well, mentioned in the Nirukta iv. 6, and told at great length in the ninth book of the MBh. (ix. 2064 ff, ed. Calc.=ix. 36.1 ff, ed. Bomb.; part lviii., p. 143, of Pratāpa Chandra Roy's translation). It is found in the JB. at i. 184. But instead of the ÇātB. passage corresponding to this, Sāyana (introduction to RV. i. 105) gives merely an abstract, and it is impossible to determine how much of the phraseology is his and how much belonged to the Brāhmaṇa. Sāyana's summary is as follows:

Ēkata, Dvita, [and] Trita in time gone by were three sages. At one time, wandering in Marubhūmi, in a forest, their bodies being oppressed by thirst, they found one well. Then he whose name was Trita alone entered the well to drink water, and having drunk himself, he drew up water from the well and gave it to the other two. These two having drunk the water, threw Trita into the well, took away all his possessions, and, closing the well by the wheel of a chariot, went away.² Thereupon Trita, thrown into the well, unable to get out of the well, bethought himself in his mind: "Let all the gods lift me up." Then he saw this hymn in praise of them. Then at night, seeing the rays of the moon within the well, he complained.

Here Śāyana breaks off.

Compare with this the story as related in the JB., i. 184, text and translation of which follow here:

trāitaṁ nāthakāmaḥ kuroṣita. āptyān sātām' nayato 'ranye pipāsā 'vīndat. te 'dhanvan. kṛpam avindan. tan nāi 'kato 'va-roḍhum akāmayata na dvitas tat trito 'vārohat. tāu yadā 'pibātām atrapyatām' atha hāi 'nan tad eva rathacakreṇā 'pidhāya gobhiḥ prāitām. so 'kāmayato 'd ita iyām gātum nātham vind-eye 'ti. sa etat sāmā 'paṇyat tonā 'stuta. sa sam indubhir' ity eva nidhanam upāt. tam parjanya vṛṣtyo 'rādhvam udaplāvayad abhi hi tad rathacakram utplāvayām cakāra yenā 'pihita āsa. tad etat gātum nāthavit sāmā. gātum vāi sa tan nātham' avindata. vindate gātum nātham ya evam veda. sa padenā 'nvāt. tam pratikhyāyā 'yantam ṛkṣo 'nyo bhātṛvā markāṣo 'nyo vanam avāskandatām.' tad u bhrātṛvyahā sāmā. bhrātṛvyatām vāva tasya tāv agacchatām yāv ṛkṣam ca markāṣam cā 'karot. atho hā 'smāi varṣuka eva parjanya bhavati. tad u paṇavyam eva. kevalān vāi sa tām paṇān akuruta. ava paṇān runddhe bahupaṇur bhavati ya evam veda. yad u trita āptyo 'paṇyat tasmāt trāitam ity ākhyāyate.

He who desires assistance should perform the trāita[-sāman].¹ The Āptyas, when they were leading on what they had got,² became thirsty in the forest. They ran. They found a well. Now neither Ēkata nor Dvita was willing to descend. So Trita descended. These two, after they had drunk, were satisfied. So then, having covered him (Trita) with the wheel of a chariot, they went away with the cows.³ He (Trita) desired: "May I go out from here, may I find a way out, assistance." He saw this sāman; with that he praised. The nidhana he performed with "With drops." Parjanya by means of a rain-shower floated him upward; thus indeed he floated him upward to the chariot-wheel with which he (T.) was covered.⁴ That same is a way-making, assistance-bringing sāman; verily, he found a way out, assistance. He finds a way out, assistance, who knows thus. He followed in [their] footsteps. When they saw him coming they hastened into the woods, the one becoming a bear, the other an ape.¹

⁷ The reading here is uncertain. According to the MBh. they had been collecting cattle from their father's yajamānas.

That is likewise a rival-slaying sāman. For these two whom he turned into a bear and an ape had aspired to rivalry with him. Moreover Parjanya rains for him. And it is also a cattle-sāman. Verily it made those cattle exclusively his. He encloses cattle, he becomes possessed of much cattle, who knows thus. And because Trita Āptya saw it, therefore it is called trāita[-sāman].

The second legend is the story of Tryarūṇa Trāivṛṣṇa, king of the Āikṣvākus, and his purohita Vṛṇa Jāna. In this case Sāyaṇa (comment. on RV. v. 2. 1) has cast his quotations into metrical form and has thus again prevented as minute a comparison as is required for our purpose. In order to gain an idea of the degree of faithfulness of the metrical paraphrase to its original, we may place side by side the original passage, TMB. xiii. 3. 12, and Sāyaṇa's metrical paraphrase.

The TMB., xiii. 3. 12, in text and version, runs as follows:

vṛṇo vāi jānas tryarūṇasya trāidhātvasyāi "kṣvākasya purohita āsit. sa āikṣvāko dhāvayat. brāhmaṇakumārāṃ rathena vyacchinat. sa purohitam abravīt tava mā purodhāyām idam idṛg upāgād iti. tam etena sāmṇā samāirayat. tad vāva sa tarhy akāmayata. kāmāsaṃ sāmā vārṇam. kāmam evāi 'tenā 'va-runddhe.

Vṛṇa Jāna was purohita of Tryarūṇa Trāidhātva Āikṣvāka. This Āikṣvāka, speeding along, cut a Brāhmaṇ's boy with the wheel. He said to the purohita: "While thou wast purohita, this here hath happened to me." He revived him by means of this sāman. For that he then desired. The vārṇa [sāman] is a wish-granting sāman, by it one obtains his wish.

Sāyaṇa, at RV. v. 2. 1, paraphrases the above as follows:

- 1 vṛṇaḥ purodhā abhavat
trasadasyor mahīpateḥ.
- 2 sa ratham dhāvayan rājā

The ÇātB. passage falls into two parts,¹ the first having its parallel in JB. iii. 94, the second in JB. iii. 95. Of the first half of the ÇātB. version, the following is Sāyaṇa's paraphrase:

The parallel to this part of the story in JB. iii. 94 is as follows:

Verily, Vṛṣa Jāna was purohita of king Tryarūpa Trāivṛṣṇa Āikṣvāka. Now in olden times the purohitas were wont to drive the chariots for their kings in order to look out for them that they did nothing wrong. These two, speeding (their horses), cut with the wheel of the chariot the son of a Brāhman who was playing in the road.

Then follow a few lines which are obscure and very corrupt; they contain a more detailed description of the cause and manner of the collision. Then follows (JB. iii. 94) the quarrel of Vṛṣa and the king :

sa ha vṛṣo . . . avatiṣṭhann uvāca tvaṁ hantā 'sī 'ti. ne 'ti ho 'vāca yo ha vāi ratham saṁgrhṇāti sa rathasye "ḥe tvaṁ hantā 'sī 'ti. ne 'ti he 'tara uvācā 'pa vā aham āyāṁsaṁ sa tvam abhi-prāyāuṣis tvam eva hantā 'sī 'ti. 95. tāu vāi prcchāvahā iti. tāu he 'kṣvākān eva praṇam eyatuḥ. te he 'kṣvākava ūcur yo vāva ratham saṁgrhṇāti sa rathasye "ḥe. tvam eva hantā 'sī 'ti vṛṣam eva prābruvan. so kāmāyato 'd ita iyāṁ gātuṁ nātham vindeya sam ayaṁ kumāro jived iti. sa etat sāmā 'pacyat tenāi 'naṁ samāirayat ā te dakṣam mayobhuvam (SV. ii. 487a=RV. ix. 65. 28a) iti. prāṇā vāi dakṣāḥ prāṇān evā 'smiṁs tad adadhāt. vahnim adyā vṛṇīmahe pāntam ā puruṣprham ā mandram ā vareṇyam ā vipram ā manīṣiṇam. pāntam ā puruṣprham (SV. ii. 487bc, 488=RV. ix. 65. 28bc, 29abc) iti. pānto vāi puruṣas tad enuṁ tat samāirayat tad etad bheṣajam prāyacoitti sāmā. bheṣajam vāi tat prāyacoittim akuruta. bheṣajam evāi 'tena prāyacoittim kurvate. tad u kāmāsaṁ. etaṁ vāi sa kāmam akāmāyata so 'smāi kāmā samārāhyata. yatkāma evāi 'tena sāmā stute sam asmāi sa kāma ṛdhyate.

Vṛṣa . . . dismounting said: "Thou hast killed him." "No, he said, he, indeed, who drives a chariot controls the chariot; thou hast killed him." "No, said the other, I reined up (ā-yam) to keep off from (apa) [the boy]; but thou didst confuse' (pra-yu) [me so that I drove on] to (abhi) [him]. It is thou that hast killed him." The two said: "Let us submit the question." To the Ikṣvākus the question they submitted. The Ikṣvākus said: "None other than he who drives the chariot is controller of the chariot." It was to Vṛṣa that they declared: "It is thou that hast killed him." He made a wish: "Would that I might get out of this plight—might find an escape, a refuge! would that this boy might come to life again!" He saw this sāman; with it he brought him to life again, saying, "For thine enlivening, kindly [power]—" (Now the enlivening ones are the vital spirits; accordingly it was the vital spirits that he restored to him.)—"That bringeth gifts, we wish to-day, The pānta (?), that which many crave, That lovely is, is to be wished, With inspiration, wisdom, filled, The pānta, that which many crave."¹ Pānta, indeed, is the man. So he thus restored him to life. This sāman is healing, expiating. He thus performed a healing, an expiation. They perform a healing, an expiation, with it. It is likewise wish-granting. Verily he wished that wish, that wish was fulfilled for him. Whatever wish one has who praises with that sāman, that wish is fulfilled for him.

The second part of the story deals with Vṛṣa's revenge. It is contained in JB. iii. 95. Again the text is in a very unsatisfactory condition. What I could make readable is given below.

The first clause refers to Vṛṣa: *sa kruddho² janam agacchad. anṛtam me³ vyavocann iti. teṣāṁ he 'kṣvākāṇām agner haro 'pāk-rāmat. yañ sāyam odanam adyañ⁴ dadhuḥ prātas so 'pacyata yam prātas sāyam saḥ. te ho⁵ cur brāhmaṇaṁ vā anāryam apār-āma teṣāṁ no gner haro pākramīd etāi⁶ 'num anumantrayāmahā iti. tam anumantrayanta. sa agacchad yathā rājñā brāhmaṇo 'numantrayāmāna āgacched⁷ evam. sa āgatyā⁸ kāmāyata paçye-yam idam agner hara iti. sa etat sāmā⁹ paçyat. tad abhyagāyatu. tad apaçyat. piçāci vā iyañ tryarūṇasya jāyā¹⁰ sa. ¹ Here I have followed Sāyana, save that I make the adjectives of 29 qualify dakṣam. Pischel takes te as accusative, and dakṣam as an adjective qualifying it. This is probably right; but I presume that the author of our Brāhmaṇa understood the passage nearly as does Sāyana. Respecting pānta, even the old commentators were in doubt—see Muir, JRAS., ns., ii. 343; Sāyana glosses it with çatrubhyo rakṣakam, sarve-ṣāṁ rakṣakam; Pischel, Ved. Stud. i. 194, refers it to the stem payā, root pi, pyā, 'swell.' Pischel's version 'swelling' gives a tolerable sense to pānto vāi puruṣaḥ, which thus refers either to the body's swelling with the entering breath, or else to the bloating of the corpse—cf. QB. xiv. 6. 2. 12, sa ucchvayaty ādhmāyaty ādhmāto mṛtaḥ çete.

³ MS. mā.—The word vyavocann seems so plainly to refer to the "sub-mitted question" (praçna, the natural object of vi-vac—see PW.), already implied in preçhāvahāi and praçnam eyatuḥ, that one is tempted to alter mā to me.—Ed's.—Cf. BAU. iii. 8. 5; 9. 26.

He (Vṛṣa), angered, went to people, saying, "Wrongly have they decided [the question] for me." Thereupon the strength departed from the fire of these Ikṣvākus. What mush they placed on their fire in the evening for their food, that was [not] done [until] morning; and what [mush they placed on the fire] in the morning, that [was not done until] evening. They said: "We have dishonorably sent away a Brāhman; therefore from our fire the strength hath departed. Come, let us summon him. They summoned him. He came, even as a Brāhman might come when summoned by a king. Having come, he wished: "Would that I might behold here the strength of the fire." He saw this sāman. [With this sāman] he exorcised⁵ it [i. e. the haras]. He did behold it.' Now this wife of Tryarūpa was a Piṣūṇī. He (V.), having covered it [agner haras, the now quickened fire] over with a mat, addressed it with the words asya sta (?). Straight upon the recitation of RV. v. 2. 1, 2, 9, and 10, this consuming fire was running unto her, up (ūrdhvam) [and] out (ud) [from under the mat, and] was burning all [the bystanders]. Thereupon they [the Ikṣvākus] duly carried home each his share of [lit. carried asunder, vihar] the quickened fire, [and] the fire began cooking [again] duly for them.

The corresponding passage of the QaṭṭB. is thus converted into verse (at RV. v. 2. 1) by Sāyaṇa:

- 15 *yata ikṣvākavo rāgād

⁵ That is, a fire with some haras or power in it, a powerful or consuming fire. The Ikṣvākus' fire was still there, but too feeble to cook effectively. In nineteenth-century English, their fire had "lost its grip," its power to attack, consume, cook, etc., in short, its haras, just as Indra lost his vīrya.

⁶ He sang-unto it, incantavit.

⁷ That is, again, the haras, in answer to his wish and exorcism.

Finally, a word may be said concerning the legends themselves. It will be seen that they appear in JB. in a form which cannot lay claim to great antiquity. They are worked out with considerable prolixity, new details have been grafted on the old stock, and, as a whole, they bear the stamp of their ritualistic redactors. They furnish another reason why the compilation going under the name of the Jāiminiya Brāhmaṇa should not be placed chronologically very far back among the earliest strata of Brāhmanical writings.

I now proceed to give the ÇāṭB. fragments with their parallels.

I. An Upaniṣad of the Çāṭyāyanins.

Çaṁkara, in his Commentary on the Vedānta Sūtras iii. 3. 25, has the following: asty ātharvaṇikānām upaniṣadārambhe mantrasamāmnāyaḥ sarvām pravīdhyā hṛdayam pravīdhyā dhamanīḥ pravṛjya çiro 'bhīpravṛjya tridhā vipṛkta ityādiḥ. sa tāṇḍinām deva savitaḥ prasuva yajñam ityādiḥ. çāṭyāyaninām çvetāçvo haritanīlo 'sī 'ityādiḥ. kaṭhānām tāittirīyakānām ca çaṁ no mitraḥ çaṁ varuṇa ityādiḥ. vājasaneyinām tā 'paniṣadārambhe pravargyabrāhmaṇam paṭhyate devā ha vāi sattraṁ niṣedur ityādiḥ. kausītakinām apy agniṣṭomabrāhmaṇam brahma vā agniṣṭomo brahmāi 'va tad ahar brahmaṇāi 'va te brahmo 'payanti te 'mṛtatvam āpnuvanti ya etad ahar upasaṁyanti 'ti.

This Upaniṣad is apparently different from the one contained in manuscript no. 3183 of the India Office Library, and noticed elsewhere (see Aufrecht, Catalogus Catalogorum, p. 640), and of which Eggeling, Catalogue, i., p. 130, gives the beginning and end.

But the first seventeen chapters of book four of the Jāimi-nīya-Upaniṣad-Brāhmaṇa have a special vaṇṣa and are marked as containing the Upaniṣad of the Čātyāyanins on the gāyatra-sāman (iv. 17. 2 sū 'śā čātyāyanī gāyatrasyo 'paniṣad evam upāsitavyā). They really begin with gētāgo durgato harinīlo 'śi, which, excepting the second word, is like Čaikara's quotation.

II. Indra cures Apālā.

For previous discussions of this story, see: Kuhn, Indische Studien, i. 118; Aufrecht, Ibidem, iv. 1; Max Müller, *Rigveda*², vol. iii., p. 33; or *Rigveda*¹, vol. iv., p. 42; Oldenberg, ZDMG., 1895, vol. xxxix., p. 76; Geldner, Vedische Studien, vol. i., p. 292. Compare also A. de Gubernatis, Die Thiere in der indog. Mythologie, 1874, pp. 14, 340.

The TMB., at ix.2.14, has a similar story about the Aṅgirasī Akūpārā. The following is an English version:

Akūpārā was an Aṅgirasī. As the skin of a lizard (godhā), so was her skin. Indra having thrice cleansed her by means of this sāman (i. e. SV. i. 167=RV. viii. 81. 1, which is therefore called ākūpāram, TMB. ix. 2. 13.) made her sun-skinned; verily that she then had wished. Whatever desire they cherish when they praise with this sāman, that desire is fulfilled for them.

The commentator adds the following:

There was an Aṅgirasī Akūpārā by name. As the skin of a lizard (godhā) is, so was her skin. She being of bad skin, like a lizard, praised Indra. He, being pleased, having three times³ hidden her with this sāman in the hole of the chariot etc., made her sun-skinned. Thus runs a mantra-text: 'In the hole of the chariot,² in the hole of the cart, in the hole of the yoke, O Čatakratu, O Indra, having thrice¹ cleansed Apālā, hast thou made her sun-skinned' (RV. viii. 91. 7), etc.

Sāyaṇa introduces RV. viii. 91 with the following itihāsa:

In times gone by, Atri's daughter, Apālā, a pious woman, having through some action or other become afflicted with skin-disease and thereupon been discarded by her husband [who considered her] unlucky, performed for a long time penance in her father's hermitage in order to get rid of the skin-disease, addressing herself chiefly to Indra. At one time, knowing: "The Soma is Indra's favorite, that I will give to Indra," she went forth to the river-road. Having bathed there, she picked up some soma in the path. Taking it [and] returning home, she chewed it on the way. Now when she ate it, Indra approached, thinking that the sound produced by the munching of the teeth was the soma-pressure noise of the pressing-stones. And approaching, he said to her: "Are the pressing-stones pressing here?" She answered: "A girl here, having gone to bathe, seeing some soma, is eating it; the noise comes from [her] eating it, but it is not the soma-pressure noise of the pressing-stones." Thus answered, Indra went straight away. She again said to Indra as he went: "Why dost thou turn away? Yet thou goest to every house in order to drink soma. Drink now here also the soma pressed with my teeth, and eat [food] consisting of grain, etc." And, not being heeded, she again said to Indra: "I do not know thee, having come here, to be Indra; when thou hast come to the house, I will do honor to thee." Having thus addressed Indra, and discerning: "It is Indra who hath come and no other," she spoke to the soma contained in her mouth: "Ho, soma! Flow thou around for Indra who hath come, first slowly, then gradually fast." Then Indra, longing for her, drank the soma pressed by her teeth in her mouth. Now when the soma had been drunk by Indra, upon Apālā's saying: "Being discarded by my husband on account of my skin-disease, I am now united with Indra," Indra said to her: "What thou desirest, that I will do." When he had spoken thus, she desired a boon. Upon her saying: "My father's head is without hair; his field, land, is without plants, etc.; my private parts also are not hairy; make these possessing hair, plants, etc.," he brought to an end the baldness on her father's head, and the field he made covered with plants, etc., and for the cure of her skin-disease he pulled her out three times through the hole of his own chariot [and] through the hole of the cart and of the yoke. The skin of her which was first cast off became a porcupine (śalyaka), the second a lizard (godhā), the third a chameleon (kṛkalāsa). Then Indra made this Apālā having a sun-like skin. So runs the ītihāsa-tale (ātihāsikī kathā).

The Brhaddevatā¹ and Śaṅgurniśya² tell the story practically as Sāyana does, omitting however Indra's miracle concerning the baldness of Apālā's father, etc. (=paraphrase of RV. viii. 91. 5 and 6).

The JB., at i. 220, like the TMB., tells of Apālā in connection with SV. i. 167 (=RV. viii. 81. 1) "ā tū na indra kṣumantam." To this sāman the JB. gives two names, viz: vāṇavam and āpālam. The former it explains as follows: venur vāi vāṇvāmitro 'kāmayatā 'gryo mukhyo brahmavarcaśi syām iti. sa etat sāmā 'paçyat. tenā 'stuta. tato vāi so gryo mukhyo brahmavarcaśy abhuvat. agryo mukhyo brahmavarcaśi bhavati ya evam veda. yađ u venur vāṇvāmitro 'paçyat tasmād vāṇavam ity ākhyāyate. Then it continues: tađ v evā 'cakṣata āpālam iti and the Apālā-story follows.

I now give the text of the Jāiminiya version (i. 220) of the Apālā story, with the parallels from the Čātyāyana (found in Sāyana's comments to RV. viii. 91. 1, 3, 5, 7) subjoined, line by line, so far as they exist:

The following is a translation of the JB. version (i. 220) :

Apālā Ātreṇī had moles or a bad skin. She desired: "May I get rid of my bad complexion." She saw this sāman; with it she praised. She, going down to the road, found a soma-stalk. This she chewed; her teeth, indeed, sounded like the pressing-stones. (Thinking:) "The pressing-stones are sounding," Indra ran thither. She recited: "The girl going down to the water hath found the soma in the road (?); taking it home, she said: 'To Indra I will press thee, to Çakra I will press thee' (RV. viii. 91. 1)." Having found out: "Verily her teeth sound thus like pressing-stones," Indra turned straight away. She said to him: "Thou who yonder goest, a manikin, looking around at every house, drink this tooth-pressed [soma], accompanied by grain, mush, cake, and uktha (RV. viii. 91. 2)." Not being heeded, she said to him: "We do not desire to perceive thee (?), we do not understand thee (RV. viii. 91. 3^a b)." Thinking: "Till now Apālā hath praised me with a complete stanza," he (Indra) turned back again. (At the words:) "Gradually, as it were, quite gradually, as it were, flow round about for Indra, O Indu (RV. viii. 91. 3^a d)," he verily sucked the soma from her mouth. If any one thus knowing kisses the mouth of a woman, that becomes a soma-draught for him. He said to her: "Apālā, what is thy desire?" She said: "These three surfaces, o Indra, cause to grow over; the father's head, the field, and here upon my genitals; all these make hairy (RV. viii. 91. 5 and 6^a)." Bald indeed was her father; he (Indra) cured his baldness. His field, indeed, did not grow, and it grew. On her genitals, indeed, there was no hair, and that grew. He pulled her out in the hole of the chariot, she became a lizard; he pulled her out in the hole of the cart, she became a (female) chameleon; he pulled her out in the hole of the yoke, she became a saṃvīṣṭikā (?). About this there is this [stanza]: "In the hole of the chariot, in the hole of the cart, in the hole of the yoke, O Çatakratu, thrice, O Indra, having cleansed her, thou hast made her sun-skinned (RV. viii. 91. 7)." That form was hers which is the most beautiful of forms. That same is a wish-granting sāman; verily she wished that wish, [and] that wish of hers was fulfilled. If anyone having a wish praises with that sāman, that wish is fulfilled for him. And because Apālā Ātreṇī saw it, therefore it is termed the āpāla (-sāman).

It will be seen that all the essential points of the legend are contained in the TMB. version : viz., Apālā's disease, the soma-offering, Indra's cure of Apālā by thrice pulling her through certain holes of his chariot. It does not say that Apālā actually shed her skin, nor anything about the transformation of the cast-off skins into animals, nor does it mention the three miracles of Indra (cure of Apālā's father's baldness, etc.)¹ The next step in the development of the legend was probably suggested by the phrase tasyā yathā godhāyās tvag evaṁ tvag āsit ("her skin was like that of a lizard," i. e. spotted). Nothing was more natural than actually turning this skin, when cast off, into a lizard (so Sāyaṇa, Bṛhaddevatā, Śaṅguruṣiṣya). But Indra pulled her three times through the holes of the chariot; and therefore two other animals had to be added into which the other two skins of her might be transformed. I do not think that the difference in order (paṇyaka, godhā, kṛkalāsa) in Sāyaṇa, Bṛhaddevatā, and Śaṅguruṣiṣya is a sufficiently weighty argument against this. The JB. and ÇātB. have godhā first; but they differ from the rest in this, that, whereas all the other versions change the cast-off skins into three animals, the text here seems to refer to a change of Apālā herself into a godhā, kṛkalāsi, and saṁgṛīṣṭakā or saṁgṛīṣṭikā.

III. Indra, Kutsa, and Luṇa.

The TMB., at ix. 2. 22 (the passage is referred to by Geldner, Ved. Stud. i. 154), in explanation of the term kāutsam for SV. i. 381 (=RV. viii. 13. 1), "indra's suteṣu someṣu," gives the story, of which the following is a translation :

Kutsa and Luṇa in rivalry called each upon Indra. Indra turned towards Kutsa. He (K.) bound him (I.) with a hundred straps by the scrotum. Luṇa said to him (I.) : "Free thyself from Kutsa, come hither; why, pray, should one like thee remain bound by the scrotum (RV. x. 38. 5b)?" Having cut them, he (I.) ran forth. Kutsa saw this sāman (i. e. SV. i. 381); with it he called after him (I.); he (I.) turned [back].—The commentary merely paraphrases.

Sāyaṇa, in the comment on RV. x. 38. 5, quotes, besides the subjoined passage from the ÇātB., a brief extract from the Chāndogya Brāhmaṇa, which runs, in English version, as follows :

Kutsa and Luṇa called at the same time upon Indra for every part of their respective sacrifices. From friendship Indra went to Kutsa. But when of his free will he had come, Kutsa bound him with a hundred straps by the scrotum.

The JB., i. 228, like the TMB., tells the story in explanation of the term kāutsam for SV. i. 381.

The continuation of the story (the compromise of Indra and the two contending ṛṣis) is a curious later development. Luṇa's hymn is the same as that which Kutsa used, but adapted to the

The following is a translation of the JB. version (i. 228) :

Kutsa and Luṇa called in rivalry upon Indra. He came to Kutsa's offering. He (K.) bound him (I.) with a hundred straps by the scrotum. Luṇa addressed him (I.): "I have heard of thee, o Indra, as one who himself catches,¹ holding thine own, o bull, urging the miserly;² free thyself from Kutsa; come hither; why should one like thyself remain bound by the scrotum? (RV. x. 38. 5)." He, having torn them all, ran toward Luṇa. Kutsa called after him: "O Indra, in the pressed somas (SV. i. 381)." He (I.) turned back to him (K.). Luṇa [addressed] him: "Indrā hoyi have hoyi." He (I.) stood between the two. He said to them both: "Take a part; of one of you I will drink with the self, of the other with greatness." "Yes." They both took a part; one obtained the self, the other the greatness. Kutsa obtained the self, Luṇa the greatness. With the self he drank of one, with greatness of the other. With the self he drank of Kutsa, with greatness of Luṇa. Verily these are his two selves, viz. the self and greatness. That same sāman (SV. i. 381) secures Indra's attendance [lit., has Indra with it]. Attended by Indra, attended by the gods, becomes the sacrifice of him, who knows this; attended by Indra unto the sacrifice he approaches, not unattended by Indra from the sacrifice he departs, who knows this. And because Kutsa saw it, therefore is it called kāutsam. It is a vigor-containing invitation-sāman. The cattle indeed are vigor; in the cattle it stands firm.

IV. The trirātra and RV. vii. 33. 7.

The short passage from the CātB. is given by Sāyaṇa on RV. vii. 33. 7. The JB. parallel is found at ii. 239 and 240. It resembles TMB. xx. 15. 1-5 so closely that I have added that text in the second line. The end of JB. ii. 240 contains the Indra-legend which corresponds to TMB. xx. 15. 6.

V. The subrahmanyā.

The short fragment from the ÇāṭB. is quoted by Sāyaṇa on RV. i. 51. 13. The quotation from the school of the Tāṇḍins which he adds is very much like ŚB. i. 1. 16.⁹ I give the whole passage of the JB. (ii. 78-80) for comparison with ŚB. i. 1. 1ff, ÇB. iii. 3. 4. 17ff, and AB. vi. 3. 1ff.

In discussing the subrahmanyā ceremony, Lāṭyāyana (ÇS. i. 2. 24) quotes from the ÇāṭB. ubhāv iti çātyāyanakam (commentary: ubhāv apy anodvāhau deyāv iti çātyāyanake çrutiḥ). To this there seems to be no parallel in the JB.

Verily the brahman and the subrahman existed in these worlds, in this creation.¹¹ From thence the subrahman went out. Verily yonder sun is the brahman, and speech is the subrahman. The gods here enclosed the brahman by means of the sacrifice within the vedī. So even now the brahman here is enclosed by means of the sacrifice within the vedī.

Now they say: "Inasmuch as they perform the other priestly (hotar-) functions within the vedī, how is it that the subrahmanyā-priest officiates outside of the vedī?" He should say: "That is the self of the vedī, viz. the utkara-mound; that is the manifest brahman, viz. the subrahmanyā. Inasmuch as he calls upon the subrahmanyā, having taken his stand upon the utkara-mound, thereby that which he performs comes to be within the vedī."

Thrice he says: "Subrahmanyom, subrahmanyom, subrahmanyom." Verily the subrahmanyā is speech. Thus he first of all takes hold of this speech; and then the brahman is speech, the syllable o is sap. He thus gladdens this speech by the sap. Thus some call upon it: "Om subrahmanyā," saying: "For breath [is] first, then speech." That is not so. It would be as if one

"O Indra, come hither!" thus he calls upon Indra at the sacrifice.

"O thou with the fallow steeds, come hither." "Together with the two fallow steeds come hither," he thus addresses him. In-breathing and out-breathing are his two fallow steeds (harī), for these two carriers (hartārāu) carry (haratah) this all. Moreover day and night are his fallow steeds, for these two carriers carry this all.

"O ram of Medhātithi." Having, indeed, become Medhātithi's ram he drank king (soma).

"O wife (?) of Vṛṣaṇagva." Having, indeed, become the wife (?) of Vṛṣaṇagva, the Bounteous One dwelt in the family.

"Down-leaping Gāura-bull." Thence, indeed, having become a Gāura-bull he leaped down upon the wave.

"O paramour of Ahalyā." He, indeed, was the paramour of Ahalyā Mātreyī.

"O Brāhman Kāuṣika, who callest thyself Kāuṣika." Verily when he got into a mighty encounter with the Asuras, at that time he put the Vedas away. He learnt them, indeed, of Viṣvāmitra. That is why he called himself Kāuṣika.

Now some call on him: "O Brāhman Kāuṣika, who callest thyself Gāutama." This, indeed, was invented by Āruṇi Yaçasvin. And let him therefore never think of using it. Let him therefore call upon him: "O Brāhman Kāuṣika, who callest thyself Kāuṣika."

"Ye gods, ye brahman-priests, come hither, come hither!" They thus by this mantra call hither both gods and brahman-priests. They, verily, called hither by this mantra, wish him well. He should therefore not fail in this mantra-call, thinking: "May I not blaspheme these."

This they say: "What is the metre of the subrahmanyā?" He should say: "The tristubh; for the tristubh is Indra's metre."

This they say: "What is the divinity of the subrahmanyā?" He should say: "Indra; for upon Indra he calls with it." Moreover he should say: "All the gods; for upon all the gods he calls with it."

This they say: "Inasmuch as the other priestly (hotar-) functions are possessed of stotra and gastra, now, where is the stotra and where is gastra of the subrahmanyā?" He should say: "In it is all this, viz. ṛc, sāman, yajus. Through it his subrahmanyā becomes possessed of stotra and gastra."

This they say: "Pray, what is the subrahmanyā like? Pray, is it like ṛc, or like sāman, or like yajus?" He should say: "It is not ṛc, not yajus, not sāman. It is like all [of these], for the brahman is like all [of these]."

Now, the subrahmanyā which he calls upon when king (Soma) is bought; that subrahmanyā which he, standing upon the utkara-mound, calls upon when the sacrificial gifts are being led around, just that is it. Again: "When he shall breathe, that shall be the end." Again: "Indra hath come, may we not drive him away with our words." This is the cow with five calves, with five feet, viz. speech. This they say: "Fivefold are cattle."

Now some call upon it by divinities, making it exclusively Agni's on the agnistut, Indra's at the indrastoma, pertaining to all gods at the nāgavadeva, with no divinity specified at the anirukta. That is probably not so. For there is no end of the brahman. As upon something indestructible he should call upon it.

In the Proceedings for April, 1895 (Journal, xvi., p. cxxli), I have already suggested that Sāyana drew his explanation of RV. 1. 51. 1 ("Indra in the form of a ram went up unto the Kaṇva-son Medhātithi and drank his soma. The ṛṣi addressed him as 'ram'; hence even now Indra is called 'ram'") from the ÇātB. I here add another passage from the JB. (iii. 233) dealing with this legend. It corresponds to TMB. xv. 10. 10-11, but is much more prolix.

The passage from the JB. (iii. 233), in text and version, is as follows:

atha mādihātitham. medhātithigṛhapatayo vāi vibhindukīyās sattram āsata. teṣāṃ dr̥ḥhacyud āgastir¹ udgātā² "sīd gāuriviti³ prastotā⁴ 'cyut' pratihartā⁴ vavukṣayo⁴ hotā⁴ sanakanavakāu⁴ kāpyāv adhvaryū⁴. paṇukāmo medhātithir janikāmāu sanakanavakāu yatkāmā itare tatkāmāḥ. nānākāmā ha sma vāi purā sattram āsate te ha sma nānāi⁴ 'va kāmān ṛddhvā⁴ "ptvo⁴ 'tisthanti. teṣāṃ ha sme 'ndro medhātither meṣasya rūpaṃ kṛtvā somam vratayati. tam ha sma bādhatē medhātither no meṣas somam vratayati⁴ 'ti. sa u ha smāi⁴ 'ṣām svam eva rūpaṃ kṛtvā somam vratayati. tato ha vā idam arvācīnam medhātither meṣa ity āhvayanti. sa etan medhātithiḥ paṇukāmas sāmā⁴ 'paṇyat tenā⁴ 'stuta etc.

Now the mādihātitha [-sāman]. The Vibhindukīyas, with Medhātithi as their gṛhapati, celebrated a sattra. Dr̥ḥhacyut Agastī acted for them as udgātā; Gāuriviti as prastotā; Acyut as pratihartā; Vavukṣaya as hotā; Sanaka and Navaka, descendants of Kapi, as adhvaryus. Medhātithi wished for cattle; Sanaka and Navaka wished for a wife; what wishes the rest had, those wishes they had.¹ In old times, indeed, they used to celebrate their sattra while having various desires; [and] having succeeding in their desires [and] obtained [them], they used to end their sattra. Now Indra, having assumed the form of Medhātithi's ram, used to drink their Soma. So thinking: "Medhātithi's ram is drinking our Soma," they used to drive him away. And he then having assumed his own form used to drink their Soma. Therefore since then they make this invocation: "O ram of Medhātithi." This Medhātithi, wishing for cattle, saw this sāman; with it he praised; etc.

VI. Taranta, Purumīdha, and RV. ix. 58.

The ÇātB. fragment is preserved by Sāyaṇa in his comment on RV. ix. 58. 3 and in that on SV. ii. 409 (ed. of Bibl. Indica, vol. iv., p. 19). The latter has a few slight variants, which I have noted below. The TMB., at xiii. 7. 12, tells the story as follows:

Verily the two Dhvasrās,² the two Puruśantis, wished to give³ a thousand to Taranta and Purumīdha, descendants of Vidadagva. These two considered: "How may what we have taken become unreceived?" They returned with: "From the two Dhvasrās,⁴ from the two Puruśantis we receive a hundred: hastening he rushes on the gladdening one (SV. ii. 409=RV. ix. 58. 3)." Thereupon what they had taken became unreceived.

I give herewith the text of the JB. version (iii. 139), subjoining the parallel text from the ÇātB.

The following is a translation of the JB. text (iii. 139) :

Now indeed Taranta and Purumīḍha, two descendants of Viḍa-daḡva, having received much of the two Dhvasras, the two Puru-śantis, considered themselves like two persons having swallowed poison. Well, they touched what they had got with the finger.
 They wished: "Would that we had not got what we have got here, that we had not received, what we have taken as it were."
 They saw this re-quatrain. With it they returned. Thence indeed what they had got became not got, what they had taken as it were [became] not received. If anyone having received (something) should wish: "Would that I had not got what I have got here, that I had not received what I have taken as it were," he should return with this re-quatrain. Then, indeed, what he has got becomes not got, what he has taken as it were [becomes] not received.

VII. On the Agnihotra.

The following fragment is from Āpastamba's ĀS., v. 23. 3.¹
 The corresponding parallel is found at JB. i. 38. The only difference of importance is JB. sāvasān against ĀtB. suyavasān, which latter the commentator paraphrases: yuthā hi cākaṭiko

The first 10 lines of text are from the JB., i. 38; and from the word juhōti on, line 11, I subjoin the parallels from the ĀtB. as VIII. King Asamāti, the Gāupāyanas, and Kilāta and Ākuli.

The two fragments of the ÇātB. are given by Sāyaṇa on RV. x. 57. 1 and 60. 7. A full synopsis of the var. lect. of Sāyaṇa's MSS. is given by Müller, *Rigveda*¹, vol. v., p. xix and p. 6; *Rigveda*², vol. iv., p. ci and p. 18; also in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1866, p. 426, where all the other parallel passages are brought together and translated. The Bṛhaddevatā legend and other material pertinent to RV. v. 24 is given by Lanman, Sanskrit Reader, p. 368-9. The JB. parallel is found at iii. 167 ff. Unfortunately the text for this last part of the Brāhmaṇa rests on a single incorrect manuscript and breaks down at an important passage which I have not been able to restore.

The ÇātB. and JB. begin the story at the point where the Gāupāyanas, having been dismissed by Asamāti, have withdrawn into the Khāṇḍava-forest and plan revenge. They injure the king by their sacrifice; but Kilāta and Ākuli, the two Asuras, whom Asamāti had chosen priests instead of the Gāupāyanas, protect their patron by snatching away the vital spirit of one of the Gāupāyanas, and depositing it inside of the paridhi-sticks. The Gāupāyanas leave the Khāṇḍava-forest in quest of the vital spirit of their brother, Subandhu. Here the text breaks down and a considerable portion is obscure. It appears that they approach Asamāti's Agni, who tells them where Subandhu's vital spirit is kept. With the verse RV. x. 60. 7 they restore their brother to life, whereupon the two Asuras vanish, having lost their magic power.

I now give the text of JB. iii. 167, and subjoin the parallels from the ÇātB. as given by Sāyaṇa.

² Müller's conjecture abhyagamaṁs must be abandoned and the JB. reading adopted. To this latter points also the var. lect. of the MSS. of Sāyana, viz. abhyagāsaṁ B₁ and Ca, abhyāṅgāsaṁ B₁, B₂, B₃, BM, CB, and abhyagāmaṁs AD. In these, the different stages of development from abhyadāsaṁ to abhyagamaṁs (A has abhyāgamaṁs) can be clearly traced. The meaning also is against abhyagamaṁs, for at this stage of the story Asamāti has just sent the Gāupāyana brothers away (tyaktvā, Kātyāyana; vpuḍasya, Bṛhaddevatā). ³ nānāv.

⁴ Sāyana's MSS. all support the reading tam; but the tāu of the JB. is better.

⁵ pavato; of Sāyana's MSS., A, AD, C₁ and C₂, also show this reading.

⁶ gnāu of Sāyana must be emended to 'nagnāu of the JB. By their magic they cooked porridge and meat without fire.

⁹ The reading asurāñnam, now adopted by Müller on the authority of Ca asurātram (A, AD, C₁, B₁, B₂, B₃, BM, CB, also point to this, reading asurāñnam), agrees better with asurāçanam of JB. than his former reading asurā annam (after B₁).

¹¹ āvām should be read in Sāyana in all three instances. All MSS. have uniformly short a in all three instances, except Ca, which has long ā in the first. Cf. also Müller's note, Rigveda, vol. iv., p. cv.

¹² Nū etā in Sāyana is based on B₁, B₂, B₃, B₄, BM, and CB. On the other hand, nvāitā in A, AD, C₁, C₂, and tyāitā in Ca point toward the JB. reading tvāi 'tā, which the Bombay edition of Sāyana adopts.

The translation of the JB. passage (iii. 167) follows:

The Gāupāyanas plotted against Asamāti Rāthaprāuṣṭha. They performed a sattra in the Khāṇḍava (-forest). Now with Asamāti Rāthaprāuṣṭha dwelt Kīrāta and Ākuli, two Asura-illusions. These two used to cook porridge placing it over non-fire, [and] meat over non-fire. [Text obscure] . . . of such magic power were they. Then verily straightway the Ikṣvākus having eaten the Asura-food were undone.

The oblations of the Gāupāyanas burnt Asamāti Rāthaprāuṣṭha. He said to these two, viz. Kīrāta and Ākuli: "Verily these oblations of the Gāupāyanas burn me." The two said: "Verily we are the healers of this, we are the expiation. We will so manage that these (oblations) shall not burn thee." The two, going away, snatched the vital spirit of Subandhu, the Gāupāyana, as he was asleep [and] unconscious, and deposited it inside of the paridhī (-sticks). For the fires had then paridhī (-sticks). Then, when Subandhu did not wake up, they became aware: "The two Asura-illusions have snatched his vital spirit." They said: "Come, we will proceed after Subandhu's vital spirit." They went forth from the Khāṇḍava(-forest): "May we not go forth from the path, not, O Indra, from the sacrifice of the soma-presser; may not foes stand in our way (RV. x. 57. 1); and what these here, what sattra we perform, from that may we not go forth (?)” [Text corrupt]... came unto Asamāti Rāthaprāṇstha. (187.) Having perceived his Agni in the distance, they knew (?): “Verily Varūthya by name is his Agni.” Indeed aforetime Agni was proclaimed as Varūthya by name: “He is Varūthya by name, he who may (will) thus satisfy thee; whatever he may say, that thou shalt do.” They went to him saying: “Agni be thou nearest to us, a kindly helper, Varūthya” (SV. i. 448=RV. v. 24. 1 var.). He said to them: “With what wish have ye come?” “We desire back the vital spirit of Subandhu,” they said. “It is inside of the paridhi (sticks),” he said, “take it.” They called it out: “This one as mother, this one as father, this one as life hath come; this is thy coming-forth, o Subandhu, come, come out” (RV. x. 60. 7). The vital spirit again entered Subandhu. He became as before. They told this to these two, Kirāta and Ākuli: “These ṛis have called out the vital spirit.” These two, not being prepared [for this], ran away. Seeing these in the distance, all their illusions departed from the two. What the worst form is, that form was theirs. (170) Now heretofore, through their magic, they had been invisible. One of them, extinguishing the fires with water, said: “Verily so doth he who desireth to smite truth by falsehood.” Likewise also they cut up the cows. Then the other one approaching, cutting the necks said: “And verily so doth he of you who desireth to smite truth by falsehood.” Then the two died. Rival-smiting, rakṣas-smiting, are these ro-verses. One who has praised with these ro-verses smites his hating rival, he smites away the rakṣas, evil.

IX. Derivation of the term abhivarta.

The Commentary on TMB. iv. 3. 2 has preserved the few words from the ÇāṭB. The JB. parallel is at ii. 378. I add TMB. iv. 3. 1-2 for the sake of comparison. TMB. viii. 2. 7, which deals with the same subject, differs somewhat.

XI. Minor Correspondences.

Several passages exhibiting similarities only:

XI. 1. Qaṁkara, on Vedānta Sūtras, iii. 3. 26, 27, ascribes to the Qātyāyanins the passage tasya putrā dāyam upayanti suhrdūḥ sādhuḥkṛtyāṁ dviṣantaḥ pāpakṛtyām.⁵ Cf. JB. i. 50, tasya putrā dāyam upayanti pitaras sādhuḥkṛtyāṁ dviṣantuḥ pāpakṛtyām. So i. 18, omitting last two words.

I may note here that I have found no passage in the JB. similar to the quotation, āudumbarāḥ kuṣāḥ, ascribed to the Qātyāyanins by Qaṁkara, com. on Ved. Sūt. iii. 3. 26, near middle.

¹ I may note here that JB. ii. 375 ff. deals with the subject matter of TMB. iv. 2. As usual, the former is more prolix, but often the two are very similar in their phraseology; cf. the beginning:

XI. 2. The Vasiṣṭha-legend,¹ which, according to Sāyana's introduction to RV. vii. 32, was contained in the Ṣaṭyāyanaka, is alluded to in the JB. several times in passages of a character similar to TMB. iv. 7. 3; viii. 2. 3; xix. 3. 8. As a sample, I give the passage at JB. i. 150 (it recurs, with variations of the sāman-names, etc., at iii. 26, 83, 149, 204):

vasiṣṭhasya janitre prajānanakāmaḥ kurvīta. vasiṣṭho vāi jūto hataputro 'kāmayata bahuḥ prajāyā paṇubhiḥ prajāyeye 'ti. sa ete sāmanī apagyat. tābhyām astuta. tato vāi sa bahuḥ prajāyā paṇubhiḥ prajāyuta. te ete prajānanī sāmanī. bahuḥ prajāyā paṇubhiḥ prajāyate ya evaṁ veda. taj janitram iti rathan-tarasāmno janitram iti brhatsāmno yad u vasiṣṭho 'pagyat tas-mād vasiṣṭhasya janitre ity ākhyāyete.

The Vasiṣṭha-legend, as told by the JB. at ii. 390, is, in text and translation, as follows :

çaktiṁ ha vasiṣṭhaṁ sādāsā agnāu prasuḥ. sa ha prasya-māna' uvāce' 'ndra kratuṁ na ā bhara pītā putrebhyo yathe 'ti. etāvad' dhāi 'vā 'sya vyāhṛtam āsa. atha hāi 'nam agnāu prasuḥ. atha ha vasiṣṭha ājagāma. sa ho 'vāca kim me putraḥ prasyamāno 'bravīd iti. tasmāi ho "cur indra kratuṁ na ā bhara pītā putrebhyo yathe 'ty etāvad evā 'sya vyāhṛtam āsīd athāi 'nam agnāu prasyann iti. sa ho 'vāca çikṣā ño asmin puruhūta' yāmanī jivā jyotir açīmahi 'ti yan ma etam uttaram ardharcam putraḥ prāpsyān na cāi 'vāi 'nam agnāu prāsiṣyān sarvām u cā "yur ayiṣyat. yāi 'va kurutamā devatānām abhūt tām apāsarat. ṛdhnavan' te sattriṇo ye ma etena putrasya pra-gāthena' stavāntā iti. sa eṣa ṛddhiprāṇ' ubhitaḥ pragātha ṛddhiṣṇavo ha bhavanty enena tuṣṭvānāḥ.

The Sādāsas [were about to] cast Çakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha, into the fire. As he was being cast, he said : "O Indra bring us strength, as a father to his children" (SV. i. 259=RV. vii. 32.26^{ab}) — that much only he uttered ; then they cast him into the fire. Now Vasiṣṭha came. He said : "What did my son say when he was being cast into the fire?" They told him : "O Indra bring us strength, as a father to his children,"—only so much had he uttered, when they cast him into the fire."

He (V.) said : "If my son had got to this second half-stanza, 'Help us, O oft-called one, in this course ; may we, alive, obtain the light' (ibid.^c ^d), truly, they would not have cast him into the fire and he would have reached old age. Who is the most Kuru-

XI. 3. In his comment on RV. viii. 95. 7, Sāyaṇa quotes as follows¹ from the ÇāṭB.: indro vā asurān² hatvā 'pūtā ivā 'medhyo 'manyata. so 'kāmayata çuddham eva mū santuṇ çuddhena sāmānā stuyur iti. sa ṛṣīm abravīt stuta me 'ti. tata ṛṣayaḥ sāmā 'paçyan. tenā 'stuvann elo nṛ indram (SV. i. 350=RV. viii. 95. 7) iti. tato vā indrah pūtaḥ çuddho medhyo 'bhavat.

Compare with this the following JB. passages: i. 121: devā vā asurān hatvā 'pūtā ivā 'medhyā amanyanta. te 'kāmayanta pūtā medhyāç çuddhās syāma gacchema svargaṁ lokam iti. ta etā ṛco 'paçyaṁs tābhīr apunata. punānas soma dhārāyā 'po va-sāno arṣaṣi (SV. i. 511=RV. ix. 107.4³) 'ti. āpo vāi pavitrām adbhīr evā 'punata. ā ratnadhā yonim ṛtasya sīdasī (ibid.⁴) 'ti. antarikṣam vā ṛtam. antarikṣam evāi 'tenā 'tyāyan. utso deva hīranyaya (ibid.⁴) iti. asāu vāi loka utso devo 'mum evāi 'tena lokam upāsīdan. tato vāi te pūtā medhyāç çuddhā abhavan agacchan svargaṁ lokam. pūto medhyāç çuddho bhavati gacchati svargaṁ lokam etābhīr ṛgbhis tuṣṭuvānaḥ.

And at iii. 126 the same formula occurs with the changes necessary for the explanation of sāuhaviṣam (sāma).

The Malayan Words in English.—By CHARLES PAYSON GURLEY SCOTT. Part II.*

Gong, a well-known instrument of sound. It is commonly regarded as Chinese; but the name and thing are of Malayan origin.

The European forms are, English gong, formerly also ghong (1698), sometimes in the Spanish form gongo (1613), French gong, Spanish yongo, Dutch gong, gonggong, German gong, gonggong, gongyon, Swedish gong, gonggong, Danish gongon. The reduplicated forms are explained in a later paragraph.

In Malayan there are two forms, which I shall set forth separately, gong and agong.

Between the two forms gong and agong there is no distinction in meaning or use; but gong is the more common form. Even when انگ agong is written, gong is often pronounced; as in English all write about and many say bout.

Parallel to gong and agong are the Malay jong and ajong, the origin of the English junk. See JUNK.

1876 R. VAN ECK, Balinesisch-Hollandsch woordenboek, p. 28.

The name gong, agong is considered to be imitativ or suggestiv of the sound which the instrument produces. The Sunda form go-ong shows imitativ vocal play. In Dayak gong, geng, is applied to the sound of the gong, which is itself cald garuntong. The word is also an adjectiv, meaning 'sonorous.' (1859 Harde-land, p. 131, 132.) So the Malagasi gonga, answering to the Malay word, is applied to the clang of two sonorous things struck together.

Le mot malgache gonga exprime généralement le son, le bruit produit par le choc de deux objets sonores l'un contre l'autre.

1896 MARRE, Vocabulaire des principales racines malaises et javanaises de la langue malgache, p. 28.

The imitativ intent appears clearly in the numerous words in Malayan and other languages which contain the syllable gong or ging reduplicated, and sometimes varied.

Haex, a name which is venerable in the annals of Malayan lexicography, givs a Malay word gonggong, speld by him gongong, meaning the barking of dogs. So Sundanese gonggong beside gogog, to bark like a dog (1862 Rigg, p. 133, 132).

Bowdich (1819) mentions an African instrument of music called a gong-gong. It is probably the same as what is elsewhere rendered gom-gom: namely a kind of "horse-fiddle," described in the quotations following. See also gum-gum, in Yule, p. 308.

The gong-gongs and drums were beat all around us.

1819 BOWDICH, Mission to Ashantee, 1:7:136. (S. D.)

One of the Hottentot Instruments of Musick is common to several Negro Nations, and is call'd, both by Negroes and Hottentots, Gom Gom.... is a Bow of Iron, or Olive Wood, strung with twisted Sheep-Gut or Sinews.

.... Ordered his Gom-gom to be brought in. This instrument was a wooden bow, the ends of which were confined by a dried and hollow gut, into which the captain blew, scraping upon it at the same time with an old fiddle-stick. 1776 J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., p. 49. (S. D.)

It is probably from a vague association of gong with these reduplicated forms in various outlandish languages, that we are to explain the reduplicated form of gong in Dutch gonggong, German gonggong, gonggon, Swedish gonggong, Danish gongon.

The alloy of copper of which gongs are made is called in Malay gangsā, Javanese gangsā, Sundanese gangsā, Balinese gangsā. In Bali the instrument itself is called by the same name. In Malay and Lampong gangsā means also a large copper dish. This word is Indian; but it may be imitativ.

The word gong is often said to be Chinese. Clifford and Swettenham so mark it; but no one seems to be able to point out the Chinese original. Schlegel does not mention the word in his list of "Chinese loan-words in Malay" (1890). Williams (1856 and 1874) has no Chinese word like it. There are no words in the "Mandarin" and Canton dialects having initial g. The ordinary Chinese word for 'gong' is lo (1874 Williams, p. 551). In the Chinese of Ning-po the word for 'gong' is dong-lo (1876 Morrison, p. 202). Here dong may be imitativ, like gong.

In the first English quotation, the word is gongo.

In the morning before day the Generall did strike his Gongo, which is an Instrument of War that soundeth like a Bell. [This was in Africa, near Benguela.]

c. 1590 Advent. of Andrew Battel, in Purchas, 2:970. (Y. p. 295.)

In the Sultan's Mosque [at Mindanao] there is a great Drum with but one Head, called a Gong; which is instead of a Clock. This Gong is beaten at 12 a Clock, at 3, 6, and 9. 1686 DAMPIER, I. 333. (Y.)

They have no Watches nor Hour-Glasses, but measure Time by the dropping of Water out of a Brass Bason, which holds a Ghong, or less than half an Hour; when they strike once distinctly, to tell them it's the First Ghong, which is renewed at the Second Ghong for Two, and so Three at the End of it till they come to Eight.

1698 FRYER, New account of East India and Persia (1672-1681). (Y.)

Southey thought the gong sounded, as he wrote, like thunder:

The heavy Gong is heard,
That falls like thunder on the dizzy ear.

1800 SOUTHEY, Thalaba, 9:190.

And the gong, that seems, with its thunders dread,
To stun the living, and waken the dead.

1810 SOUTHEY, Curse of Kehama, 148.

Gong enters the English dictionaries first in 1818, in Todd's edition of Johnson. Crawford describes the gong as he saw it in its own home. Wallace mentions a wooden gong.

Next to the drum may be mentioned the well known instruments called Gongs. The word, which is correctly written gung, is common to all the dialects of the Archipelago, and its source may be considered to be the vernacular language of Java; if, indeed, it was not originally borrowed from the Chinese. The gong is a composition of copper, zinc, and tin, in proportions which have not been determined. Some of them are of enormous size, being occasionally from three to four feet in diameter. They have a knob in the centre, which is struck with a mallet covered at top with cloth or elastic gum. They are usually suspended from a rich frame, and the tone which they produce is the deepest and richest that can be imagined.

1820 CRAWFORD, Hist. of the Indian Archipelago, 1:335-6.

At each mile there are little guard-houses, where a policeman is stationed; and there is a wooden gong, which by means of concerted signals may be made to convey information over the country with great rapidity.

1869 WALLACE, Malay Archipelago (1890), p. 76.

It is a pleasing reflection to a lover of progress to see how this humble savage instrument of noise has been added to the appliances of modern culture, and how the name unchanged, and the thing variously adapted, has become, in hotels and railway-stations, on fire-engines, ambulances, trolley-cars and bicycles, familiar to the ears of millions who hear the increasing noises of advancing civilization, and are glad.

Gutta, a gum or resin, especially gutta-percha. Also guttah, French gutte, New Latin gutta, probably assimilated to Latin gutta, a drop. The more exact English and New Latin form would be getta* or gatta*. The Malay word is گتہ gĕtah, gatah (transliterated by Marsden, secondly, guttah; by Wall, gĕttah), gum, resin, sap, juice. It is in Achinese getah, Batak gota, Nias gito, Javanese getah, Sundanese getah, Balinese getah, Dayak gita, Sampil (Borneo) getah, Katingan (Borneo) gita, Macassar gatta, Bugis gōta, Tagal and Bisaya gata.

Gutta has no wide use as an English word, but it is occasionally found. It is technical in chemistry.

The word which we incorrectly write Gutta ought to be written Gâtah, which, in the Malay language, is a common name for any gum, exudation, or inspissated juice of a plant.

Gutta-percha, a well-known gum, of manifold economic uses. The word came into English use soon after its first mention in 1842 or 1843, and had become familiar before 1848. It soon spread into the other languages of Europe: French gutta-percha, Spanish gutapercha, Portuguese gutta percha, Italian guttu perca, Dutch gutta-percha, gutta-perga, German gutta-percha, Swedish gutta-percha, Danish gutta-perka. In French, Dutch, and Swedish the ch is mistakenly pronounced as c or k; in Italian and Danish it is so written—a reasonable inference from an unreasonable orthography.

The Malay name is گٹٹا پرجا getah percha, or گٹٹا پرجا getah perchah. It means 'gum of percha.' For gutta, see the preceding article. Percha is given as the name of the tree, Isonandra gutta (Hooker 1847), from which the gum, or a similar gum, was obtained; but the present gutta-percha of commerce is said to be all or mostly obtained from other trees, and is called by the natives accordingly, getah tûban, getah rambong, getah sundi, getah gerih, etc. Other names exist in the other dialects. But I have no room for the botanic and commercial details. Ἑτυμολογῶν. See the English quotations below and the references there added.

Before the quotations for getah percha are given, something must be said of percha. It does not appear in the earlier dictionaries, but it is entered by Crawford (1852) and later lexicographers as the name of the tree which produces the gum.

There is some easy recipience here, but the statement looks like a piece of verity. It sorts with other names of gummiiferous trees of the Malayan Archipelago, where gummiiferous trees abound.

But getah percha has been otherwise explained as meaning 'gum of Sumatra,' there being an other word فرچ Percha, a name of Sumatra (as well as a third word فرچ percha, a rag, a remnant). Sumatra is also cald فرچ پالو Pulau Percha, 'island of Percha.' This appears in what is given in Worcester (1860) as the Malay name for gutta-percha, namely "Gutta-Pulo-Percha," that is getah pūlau Percha. Pulo is Javanese, pūlau Malay. Tiedtke (1872), in a glossary of Bornean dialects, gives the Malay name of gutta-percha as getah maloe pērtja; but there is no word maloe (*malu), in any applicable sense, in the Malay dictionaries. Can it be an error for poelau (pūlau)?

Maleisch getah maloe pērtjah, Sampsitch getah njatoh, Katin-gansch gita njatoh, gutta percha. 1872 TIEDTKE, Woordenlijst, p. 71.

At any rate percha does not appear to be known apart from the gum of whose name it forms a factor.

The name gëtaḥ percha has past into Sundanese :

Gëtaḥ Percha, known only as a foreign product on Java. It is the gum of the Isonandra Gutta. Gëtaḥ Percha is found on Sumatra, Borneo and adjacent isles. It is found, apparently as the gum of various trees, of which the Balam or Isonandra is the most prominent.

1862 RIGG, Dict. of the Sunda lang., p. 129.

Gutta-percha was first brought to English and European notice in 1843, or, according to an other statement quoted by Yule, "a year or two" before that date. In 1847 Captain Mundy, Rajah Brooke's friend, speaks of it at length, as of recent introduction but already in great use :

The principal products of the north-west coast of Borneo are sago, pepper, rice, bees' wax, camphor, birds' nests, tortoise-shell, betel-nuts, cocoa-nuts, coal and other mineral and vegetable productions, such as gutta percha, vegetable wax, timber of first quality, oils, ebony wood, &c.... Gutta percha is a remarkable example of the rapidity with which a really useful invention becomes of importance to the English public. A year ago it was almost unknown, but now its peculiar properties are daily being made more available in some new branch of the useful or ornamental arts. The history of its introduction should urge the new colonists of Labuan to push with energy their researches into the as yet almost untrodden path of Bornean botany.

Dr. Oxley, of Singapore, has furnished the most complete description which has yet been published of the tree, and the manner in which its gum is collected by the natives. He describes the tree as being sixty or seventy feet in height, and two or three feet in diameter at the base; it is most commonly found in alluvial tracts, at the foot of the hills.... Gutta percha is not affected by boiling alcohol, but is readily dissolved in boiling spirits of turpentine.... It is already extensively used in England for soles of boots and shoes, and for driving bands in machinery; it bids fair also to supersede all other materials in the manufacture of picture frames and other ornamental mouldings.

By 1856 gutta percha was wrapping electric cables in the English and Irish channels, and the Mediterranean and Black seas:

Their most remarkable and valuable product is the guttah-percha, a few years ago used only for Malay horsewhips and knife-handles, but by the help of which the English and Irish channels, the Mediterranean and the Euxine, are now crossed by the electric telegraph. It was from the Peninsula, in fact, that this article was first made known to Europeans, more than three centuries after the country had been frequented by them. This was in 1843, and in justice to my relative, the late Dr. William Montgomerie, I am bound to mention that he first made the discovery, and was rewarded for it by the gold medal of the Society of Arts. 1856 CRAWFORD, Hist. of the Indian Islands, p. 255.

L. jungus*, the word being derived (perhaps at second hand) from the Malay. The Malay word, indeed, like the original of GONG, appears in two forms, a monosyllabic jong or jung, and a dissyllabic ajong or ajung.

Perhaps both ajong and agong are the result of the tendency to dissyllabism which characterizes the Malayan languages. Jong is the prevalent form. According to Clifford and Swettenham (1894), the Malay word, though usually written ajong, is always pronounced, in colloquial speech, jong.

In the following anecdote told by Wallace, the "Jong," mentioned by some natives of the Aru islands as the proper name of "the great ship" which "is always in the great sea," is an echo of the Malay and Javanese name for 'junk.'

And so I was set down as a conjurer, and was unable to repel the charge. But the conjurer was completely puzzled by the next question: "What," said the old man, "is the great ship, where the Bugis and Chinamen go to sell their things? It is always in the great sea—its name is Jong; tell us all about it." In vain I inquired what they knew about it; they knew nothing but that it was called "Jong," and was always in the sea, and was a very great ship, and concluded with, "Perhaps that is your country?"

1869 WALLACE, Malay Archipelago (1890), p. 352. (Aru islands.)

The word has often been derived from the Chinese, the Chinese word being variously given as chw'an, chw'en, ch'w'en, tsu'an (G. tschuen, F. tschouen). Williams, in his great Syllabic dictionary of the Chinese language (1874), gives (p. 120), as the eighth article under the "syllable" chw'en, the word chw'an, "a ship, boat, bark, junk," with other senses and numerous phrases. At the head of the syllable "chw'en" (p. 119) he gives, as variant pronunciations of that syllable, "in Canton, ch'ün, shün, shan, and shun; in Swatow, chw'an, chun, hun, and ch'un; in Amoy, chw'an, ch'an, swan, and ch'un; in Fuhchun, sung, ch'üng, chw'a, chw'ang, tiüng, and chw'üng," with other forms. Some of the forms ascribed to Fuhchun, chw'ong, ch'üng, etc., certainly resemble the Malay jong, but which of these or the others are used in the sense of jong is not stated. In Williams's Tonic dictionary of the Canton dialect (1856), under the syllable shün, appears chw'en in that sense.

In Morrison's vocabulary of the Ningpo dialect of Chinese, 'ship' is rendered by jün, exprest by a character pronounced differently. Whether even jün is connected with the Malay jung, jong, and if so, which is the original, ar questions not for me to decide.

There is one Malay name for a boat which probably does come from one of the Chinese forms cited, namely, Malay چونيا chūniā, a flat-bottomed boat.

چونيا Chūniā, a kind of boat, flat-bottomed and without a keel, introduced by the Chinese. 1812 MARSDEN, p. 121.

The word came so early in European mention (c. 1331) that it was not at first recognized as of eastern origin. It was supposed to be derived from the Latin juncus, a reed or rush. Yule says:

Dobner, the original editor of Marignolli, in the last century, says of the word (junkos): "This word I cannot find in any medieval glossary. Most probably we are to understand vessels of platted reeds (a juncis texta) which several authors relate to be used in India." It is notable that the same erroneous suggestion is made by Amerigo Vespucci in his curious letter to one of the Medici, giving an account of the voyage of Da Gama, whose squadron he had met at C. Verde on its way home.

1886 YULE, p. 360.

So America has been named after a false etymologist! But he was not the only famous man whose etymologies are "a juncis texta"—made of many rushes, and not worth one.

JUNK....This is one of the oldest words in the Europeo-Indian vocabulary. It occurs in the travels of Friar Odorico, written down in 1331, and a few years later in the rambling reminiscences of John de' Marignolli. The great Catalan World-map of 1375 gives a sketch of one of those ships with their sails of bamboo matting, and calls them Iuchi, no doubt a clerical error for Iūchi. [Iunchi, plural of Iuncus*.]

The imitative nature of the name is indicated by the fact that in Dayak kahau means 'call':

Kahau, das Rufen : das gerufen werden, sein....

1859 HARDELAND, Dajacksch-deutsches wörterbuch, p. 202.

I find no entry of kahau as a Dayak name for the monkey; but kahio is a Dayak name for the orang-utan (1859 HardeLand, p. 203).

The appearances of kahau as an English word are satisfactorily frequent. Simians have their day again.

Another very remarkable kind [of Semnopithecus] is found in Borneo. It is S. nasalis (the kahau, or proboscis monkey), and, as its name implies, it has an exceedingly long nose. In the young state, the nose is much smaller relatively, and is bent upwards. No similar structure was known to exist in any other ape whatever until quite recently.

Ketchup, also catchup (1690), catsup (1730), a well-known name for various kinds of sauces.

The etymology of ketchup has hitherto been obscure, and the correct form undetermined. The implication in Johnson's definition of catsup as "a kind of Indian pickles" is that the word is Indian, that is, East Indian, and it is stated in various dictionaries to be "East Indian." Indeed the first English mention of the word (1690) defines "catchup" as "a high East India sauce."

Two different statements, referring the word to a definite language, are on record.

According to a statement quoted by Latham from Brande and Cox, the source is an alleged Japanese "kitjap," the name of "some similar condiment." But no Japanese kitjap can be found; indeed kitjap is an impossible form in that language. The statement may have arisen from the fact that another name for a similar condiment well known in the East, is Japanese; namely soy. See further below.

Another suggestion is that ketchup is from a Chinese source; but nothing like proof is offered. [The suggestion is discussed by the late Professor Terrien de Lacouperie, in a paper printed in the Babylonian and oriental record, November 1889, to which Professor Jackson kindly directed my attention after I read this paper and pointed out the origin of the word in Malay, as set forth below. Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie finds no evidence for the asserted Chinese origin but concludes:

My impression is that the word may have a Chinese origin, but not from China. It may have come from Australasia or the Malay peninsula, where the Chinese colonists of southern China are so numerous. The expression may have been made there, with a local acceptance unknown in the mother country.

1889 TERRIEN DE LACOUPERIE, in the Babylonian and oriental record, vol. 3, no. 12, Nov. p. 284-286.]

It does not appear from what source the form kitjap, which is cited in Brande and Cox as "Japanese," and in Latham as "Oriental," and elsewhere as "East Indian," found its way into the round of English mention; but it is clear that kitjap is a Dutch spelling, and the presumption is that it represents a native word of some part of the Dutch East Indies. Any one familiar with the form and nature of words in Malay, would recognize the form of kitjap, that is kichap, as characteristic of that language. As a matter of fact the word is found in Malay, namely, كيتچاپ kēchap, kīchap, in Dutch transliteration ketjap. It is found also in Lampong, kichap, and in Sundanese, kechap.

The following are the quotations for the Malay kēchap, kīchap, as entered in Malay dictionaries. It will be seen that they are all recent.

كيتچاپ ketjap, de Japansche soya. 1893 KLINKERT, p. 563.

Ketjap, inlandsche soja, soja. 1895 MAYER, p. 137.

But an earlier mention of the Malay kēchap occurs in the following (1876), where it is said that the word is not known in the Malay as spoken in the Moluccas.

Soi. M[anado], A[mbon], Holl. soja; kétjap is niet bekend.

1876 CLERQ, Het Maleisch der Molukken, p. 53.

Beside these five professedly Malay entries, I find two extra-Malay, but in the general sense Malayan entries, showing the word in the languages of Lampong and Sunda. But I have no doubt it is merely the Malay word taken into these tongues.

The Lampong entry is brief. It defines the word as 'soy.'

Kitjap, soja.

1891 HELFRICH, Lampongsch-Hollandsch woordenlijst, p. 11.

The Sundanese entry (1862) is the earliest I have found:

Kéchap, Catchup, a dark coloured sauce prepared by the Chinese.

1862 RIGG, Dict. of the Sunda lang., p. 212.

This may imply that the name itself is of Chinese origin; but that is not said by Rigg. Junk is another Malayan word commonly associated with the Chinese, but with no proved source in the Chinese language. Either might be from a provincial or extra-territorial Chinese source not yet traced.

No one, except Rigg (1862), seems to have noticed that this word kēchap is the same as the English ketchup; but the form and the sense make it clear. Ketjap is defined by Klinkert as "the Japanese soy"; by Mayer as "the native soy," meaning, I take it, "the native preparation answering to the Japanese article called soy." What is soy? The word is from the Japanese. It exists in the Malay of the Molucca islands as soi (1876 Clercq as quoted). The Japanese word is shō-yu, "a kind of sauce made of fermented wheat and beans" (1867 Hepburn). The Chinese form, in the Mandarin, is sh'yiū (1874 Williams) or shi-yu (1872 Doolittle), Canton shi-yau (1870 Chalmers, 1856 Williams), Ningpo tsiang-yiu (1876 Morrison). The Chinese forms are probably original. Tsiang-yiu, I am told, answers phonetically to shō-yu.

The Chinese prepare from the gédélé a species of soy, somewhat inferior to that brought from Japan. 1817 RAFFLES, Hist. of Java, 1: 98.

The word kēchap, whatever its origin, is in every respect in accord with Malay analogies. It looks just like a nativ. Indeed, there are several other words of similar form, among which, were kēchap, as a name for soy, more firmly established, one might reasonably seek its origin. There is, in the first place, a word کچف kēchap, مچف mēngēchap, which means 'to smack with the lips,' 'to taste with the lips or tongue'; کچن kēchap, 'a taste, smack.' I omit the references.

This kēchap, 'to smack with the lips,' appears to stand in some relation with the word kachup, 'a kiss,' mengachup-i, 'give a kiss.' So many unprejudiced observers have testified to the great similarity between the two actions, that the connection can not be denied. The English smack may be heard in support of this observation. I omit illustrations.

There is another word kēchap, 'to wink,' which may perhaps without undue subtlety be brought into relation with 'smack,' and so with the tasting or "sampling" of things that appear on brief reflection to have an approved quality.

The first English mention of the word ketchup which I have noted is one quoted from a "canting" dictionary assigned to the date 1690, by others to "about 1699." Of course it was never a "cant" word. It was and is a common mistake for compilers of dictionaries of "cant" and "slang" to include in their collection stray words of any kind, foreign, provincial, or archaic, not familiar to them or to "the general reader."

1730 SWIFT, Panegyric on the Dean.

Bailey, that industrious compiler, tho he mist the word in his "Universal etymological dictionary" (1721 and 1727 and many later issues), secured it, no doubt because he found it in what he appropriated, in his "Dictionarium domesticum, being a new and compleat household dictionary for the use both of city and country" (1736). Under "Catchup" he gives two recipes. I quote the first in full:

Catchup that will keep good 20 Years. Take 2 quarts of strong stale beer, and half a pound of anchovies, wash them clean, cloves and mace of each a quarter of an ounce, of pepper half a quarter of an ounce, a race or 2 of ginger, half a pound of shallots, and a pint of flap mushrooms well boil'd and pickl'd. Boil all these over a slow fire; till one half is consum'd, then run it through a flannel-bag; let it stand till it is quite cold, then put it up in a bottle and stop it close. One spoonful of this to a pint of melted butter, gives both taste and colour above all other ingredients; and gives the most agreeable relish to fish sauce. It is esteem'd by many, to exceed what is brought from India.

1736 BAILEY, Dictionarium domesticum.

Catchup of Mushrooms. Fill a stewpan full of the large flap mushrooms....[etc.]

1736 Id.

Under "mushrooms" and in paragraphs following, "ketchup" is mentioned several times:

Mushrooms are produc'd plentifully in the fields in September, and therefore this is the properest time to provide them for making of ketchup and mushroom gravy.... 1736 Id., s. v. mushrooms (1st par.).

Catsup, n. s. A kind of Indian pickles, imitated by pickled mushrooms. 1755 JOHNSON.

CATSUP, kat'sh-up. s. A kind of pickle. 1780 SHERIDAN.

See also 1800 MASON (1883), Suppl. to Johnson's dict.; 1818 TODD; 1828 WEBSTER, etc.

It will be noticed that Sheridan (so Latham later) gives catsup the pronunciation of catchup, which he does not enter. He omits also ketchup.

The right form is ketchup. Catchup, tho given by some dictionaries as the "correct" form, is a mistake, and catsup is quite wrong.

Kris, also kriss, criss, crise, cryse, creese, crease, cross, a Malayan dagger.

The word is familiar in English literature, in romance and poetry, where it is now usually speld creese. In travels it is made more 'nativ'-looking, kris or kriss. There is something so nice and savage about k.

The word is found in other European languages, French criss, Dutch kris, Swedish kris, etc.

The word is in Malay written either with a long vowel, indicated, کریس krīs or karīs, kōrīs, or with a short vowel, not indicated, کرس kris or karis, kōris; sometimes transliterated kres. It is found throughout the whole Archipelago. The dagger is a tropical fruit, tho not unknown in what are called the temperate zones. The other forms are Achinese کریس krīs, kōrīs, Batak horis, Lampong kēris, Javanese kris, keris, Sundanese kris, Balinese keris, k'ris (alternativ to kadatan), Dayak karis, Macassar kurisi, Sangi-Manganitu kirise, Tagal kalis, Bisaya kalis.

The word is said to be original in Javanese. I suppose it would be hard to prove it so, or to prove it not so. Yule suggests that it is identical with the Hindustani kirich, a straight sword, and says "perhaps Turki kilich is the original." The Turki kilich I do not find in Shaw's vocabulary (1880) or in Vambéry (1878).

The Hindustani "کرج kirch or kirich" is marked by Shakespear (1817) as "perhaps from Malay کریس krīs" (p. 592). And indeed why should not the Malays be allowed to have some words of their own, even to lend? Or is "the cursed Malayan creese" Malayan only in use?

The Malays and Javanese make the kris in innumerable shapes, all warranted to kill, and adorn them with a pleasing exuberance of fancy, and with pious care. So we adorn our swords and pistols and guns. It has ever been the sweet office of Art to mitigate the asperities of Murder by improving and beautifying its weapons; and, in our Western civilization, at least, no one, however poor, need go without a beautiful implement of slaughter. But in the Far East, as in the West, these apparent contemplations of death are often for ornament, rather than for utility.

The extraordinary demand for the dagger or kris has given rise to a subdivision of labour in its fabrication, unknown to any other employment. The manufacture of the blade, of the handle, and of the scabbard, are each distinct occupations. The shape of the kris varies with every tribe, nay, in every district of the same country; and there is according to taste and fancy, an endless variety, even among the same people. The burthensome exuberance of the Javanese language furnishes us with fifty-four distinct names for as many varieties of the kris, specifying, that twenty-one are with straight, and thirty-three with waving, or serpentine blades!

Lorikeet, a bird of the parrot kind, resembling the lory.

Lory, a bird of the parrot kind, found in the Molucca islands; also used, at times, as a general name for 'parrot.'

The word is found in English in two pronunciations, (1) speld lory, also probably somewhere lori*, pronounced lō'ri; (2) speld loory, lury, luri, pronounced lū'ri (not liū'ri). The second form is nearer to the original Malay.

In French the word is found written lauri (1705), that is lori*; and loury, that is louri* = Eng. lury, luri.

The source is Malay لوري or لُري lūrī, lūri, Javanese luri, Sundanese luri, Sangi-Manganitu lūrin, and this لوري lūrī, lūri, is a dialectal form of the more familiar Malay نوري nūrī, nūri, whence the now obsolete English form nory, nury. See NORY.

Maleo, a remarkable bird of Celebes and the Molucca islands, a megapode ('big-foot') or mound-builder.

I do not find the word in the regular Malay dictionaries, but a Malay form mauleo is cited in Ekris's vocabulary of the languages of the Amboina islands, and a form moléo in Clercq's vocabulary of 'The Malayan of the Moluccas,' who ascribes to Amboina a form muléu* (in his Dutchified spelling moelêue). Valentyn (1726) cites "malleoe," that is maileu*, maleu*, and

"moelcoe" that is muleu*, as a nativ name in Amboina (Newton). Ekris cites an Alfurese form madeun. In the Banks' islands, far to the east, it is malau. Other forms in and near the Molucca islands, as given by Ekris, ar muma, memai, momal. It is possible that these ar related to mauleo, moleo. A little thing like this does not shock the phonetic sense in the happy eastern seas. In Timor the name is kés. In the Philippine islands the bird was cald tabon, a name which has appeared several times in English context, but is excluded from the present paper.

The word is apparently to be regarded as nominally Malay, taken up into the liberal vocabulary of that Eastern English from a nativ name in Celebes or the Moluccas.

One traveler in the Archipelago has understood the name as "malayu," as if it meant literally 'Malay':

I was specially anxious to get a specimen of the malayu, as the Malays strangely name a bird, the Megapodius Forstent, which is allied to the hen. The common name for these birds is "mound-builders," from their peculiar habit of scratching together great heaps of sand and sticks, which are frequently twenty or twenty-five feet in diameter, and five feet high. These great hillocks are their nests, and here they deposit their eggs.

1869 BICKMORE, Travels in the East Indian Archipelago, p. 287.

The maleo first becomes conspicuous in English in Wallace's classical work.

Among these [birds] were the rare forest Kingfisher (Crittura cyanotis), a small new species of Megapodius, and one specimen of the large and interesting Maleo (Megacephalon rubripes), to obtain which was one of my chief reasons for visiting this district [in Celebes].

It is in this loose, hot black sand that those singular birds the "Maleos" deposit their eggs.

1869 Id., p. 203.

The feet of the Maleo are not nearly so large or strong in proportion as in these birds [Megapodii and Talegalli], while its claws are short and straight instead of being long and much curved.

The curious helmeted Maleo (Megalocephalon rubripes) is quite isolated, having its nearest (but still distant) allies in the Brush-turkeys of Australia and New Guinea.

They [the Megapodii of the Moluccas] are allied to the "Maleo" of Celebes, of which an account has already been given, but they differ in habits, most of these birds frequenting the scrubby jungles along the sea-shore, where the soil is sandy, and there is a considerable quantity of débris, consisting of sticks, shells, seaweed, leaves, &c.

The interesting bird known as Megacephalon maleo is a native of Celebes, and is confined to the littoral parts of the island. It abounds in the forests, and feeds on fruits, descending to the sea-beach in the months of August and September to deposit its eggs.The maleo is a handsome bird, the upper parts and tail being glossy black, and the under parts rosy white....

A remarkable megapod is found in all the groups, if not of more than one species, at any rate with different habits. At Savu, where without any attempt at domestication they have become private property, they lay in a carefully divided and appropriated patch of sand, and come out of the bush, as the natives say, twice a day to lay and look after their eggs. In the Banks' Islands and the New Hebrides they lay their eggs in the hollow of a decayed tree or in a heap of rubbish they have scratched together. In the Banks' Islands these birds are called malau, as they are maleo in Celebes.

In 1726 Valentyn published his elaborate work on the East Indies, wherein (deel iii. bk. v., p. 320) he very correctly describes the Megapode of Amboina under the name of "Malleloe" [read "Malleoe"; in Dict. 1893 "Moeleoe or Malleoe"], and also a larger kind found in Celebes, so as to shew he had in the course of his long residence in the Dutch settlements become personally acquainted with both.

The Malayan maleo is probably connected with the name of an Australian megapode, which is said to be "commonly known in England as the Mallee-bird." (1883 Newton, in Encyc. Brit., 15: 827; 1893 Dict. of birds, p. 530.)

Mamuque, a strange wild fowl which our forefathers, the stouter-hearted of them, read about in Sylvester's pitiless translation of the painful Du Bartas. I postpone the quotations until the origin of the name has been disclosed.

Sylvester's mumuque is from the French mamuque, in Cotgrave mammue, accepted as the name of a bird thus described by that worthy lexicographer:

Mammue: f. A winglesse bird, of an vnkowne beginning, and after death not corrupting; she hath feet a band long, & so light a body, so long feathers, that she is continually carried in the ayre, whereon she feeds ; some call her the bird of Paradiſce, but erroneously ; for that hath wings, and differs in other parts from this.

1611 COTGRAVE.

This interesting description is repeated unchanged in the later editions, 1650, 1660, 1673. The scientific gravity of the concluding words, showing wherein the "mamnuque" differs from the "bird of Paradiſce," could not be surpast at the present day. The myth is explained under MANUCODIATA.

The French manuque is a scribal error, apparently established in use, for manuque*, which represents the Italian manuche, the name of this bird in Florio (1598) and earlier.

The Italian form manuche arose (perhaps as a plural of manuca* ?) from a misunderstanding of some form of the full name, which also appeared as manucodiuta (taken perhaps as manuca diata* ?).

Sylvester, following Du Bartas, describes the phenix and other rare birds. Then he brings in the strangest bird of all :

But note we now, towards the rich Moluques,
Those passing strange and wondrous (birds) Mamuques*¹ (VVond'rous indeed, if Sea, or Earth, or Sky, Saw ever wonder, swim, or goe, or fly)
None knowes their nest, none knowes the dam that breeds them :
Food-less they liue ; for, th' Aire alonely feeds them :
VVingles they fly ; and yet their flight extends,
Till with their flight, their vnknow'n lives-date ends.

The poet thought Wisdom soard like a "mamnuque" :

To th' euer-Bowrs her oft a-loft t' aduance,
The light Mamuques wing-les wings she has :
Her gesture cool, as comly-graue her pase.

In the course of the seventeenth century the bird began to fly low, and then the story faded away. See MANUCODIATA. It was a fable; but it is not every fable that ends in a bird of Paradise.

Manucodiata, a bird of paradise. This word is found in English works of the seventeenth century. It is a transfer from the Italian and New Latin manucodiata, which is an ingenious Latin masking of the original Malay name, مانق ديوات mānuḥ dēwāta. It means 'bird of the gods' or 'bird of heaven.' It has been rendered also "celestial bird" (Marsden), "holie Bird" (Purchas), and "God's bird" (Wallace), but is commonly rendered after the New Latin of the Dutch Orientalists, "bird of paradise" or "paradise-bird." The two terms of the name are explained below. The second term is Sanskrit. Other Malayan names of the bird are mentioned below in due order.

The following are the quotations for mānuḥ dēwāta.

Manuk dēwāta the bird of paradise (in the language of the Molucca islands, being by the Malays more usually termed būrong sūpan or the elegant bird). 1812 MARSDEN, p. 140.

(See also 1:349 s. v. dēwāta, quoted below.)

The name mānuḥ dēwāta is found also in Balinese, manuk dēwatā.

Manoek gevogelte in 't algemeen; kip, hoen, haan; .. — dēwatā de paradijsvogel.

1876 R. VAN ECK, Balineesch-Hollandsch woordenboek, p. 168.

The Malay مانق mānuḥ 'bird,' 'fowl,' appears in nearly all the languages of the Archipelago. It is native in the eastern islands and in Polynesia. The forms are Batak manuk, Achinese manok, Lampong manuk, Javanese manuk (Favre, Dict. malais, 1875, but not in Favre, Dict. javanais, 1870, nor in Roorda van Eysinga 1835), Sandanese manuk (Favre 1875, but not in Rigg 1862), Balinese manuk, Dayak manok, Bareë (Borneo) manuk, manu, Bugis manok, Buton manumanu, Menado manu, Sulu manuk, Buru manut, Amboina manu, manuol, Alfurese manu and pam, Tagala manok, Bisaya manuk, etc. See the quotations below, and a list, including additional forms manoko, manái, manúti, manok, mano, manúe, manúo, manusan, malok, and namo, in Wallace, Malay Archipelago (1890), p. 471; also manufoik, manhui in Forbes, p. 491.

The common Polynesian form is manu. The like and other forms exist in the Melanesian and Micronesian languages. A long list is given in Tregear's Maori-Polynesian comparative dictionary, 1891, p. 208, 209.

The Malay name būrung dēwāta is reflected in Pigafetta's account as bolon dinata [diwata = divata]. (Hakluyt soc. 1874, p. 143. Y.)

The word dēwāta, which occurs in the two names mentioned, is found in most of the languages of the Archipelago, in the senses 'divinity,' 'deity,' 'a god,' 'the gods,' Malay ديوات dēwāta, Achinese diwata, Batak dēbata, Javanese dewata, Sundanese dewata, Balinese dēwatā, Macassar rēwata, Bugis dēwata, Sangi-Manganitu dēwatah. It is one of the conspicuous Hindu words in Malayan: Singhalese dewata (1830 CLOUGH, p.

286), Hindustani دیوتا devtā (deo'ta, Fallon) a god, a divinity (1817 SHAKESPEAR, p. 409; 1879 FALLON, p. 669), from Sanskrit देवता devatā, divinity, a divinity, a god or idol (1891 CAPPELLER, p. 236), from देव devā, a god.

ديوات dēwāta, Hind. देवता, a term likewise applied to the above celestial beings [dēwa], but with this distinction, that the appellation of dēwa belongs to their personal nature, and dēwāta to their divine character, and accordingly the invocations and prayers (at least in Malayan poetry) are always addressed to them under the latter name...

A third Malay name occurs in the commercial language بورغ مات būrung māti, 'dead bird.' Most Malays see the bird of heaven only when it is dead. They buy and sell it dead; but they do not wear dead birds on their heads when they go to church. They are not civilized.

These are now all known in the Malay Archipelago as "Burong mati," or dead birds, indicating that the Malay traders never saw them alive.

1869 WALLACE, Malay Archipelago (1890), p. 420.

A geographic name būrong Papāa, 'bird of Papua' (New Guinea and adjacent islands), occurs. I notice also with two Amboina names, manu mahu ('foreign bird') and salaracan. There are other Malayan names which I must pass by.

In English text the word is first cited as Italian:

In these Ilands [Moluccas] onlie is found the bird, which the Portugales call Passaros de Sol, that is Fowle of the Sunne, the Italians call it Manu codiatas, and the Latinists, Paradiseas, and by us called Paradise birdes, for ye beauty of their feathers which passe al other birds: these birds are never seene alive, but being dead they are found vpon the Iland; they flie, as it is said, alwaies into the Sunne, and kéepe themselues continually in the ayre....for they haue neither féeet nor wings, but onely head and bodie, and the most part tayle....

1598 tr. LINSCHOTEN, Discours of voyages (Hakluyt soc. 1885), 1:118.

The Birds of Paradise (saith this Author) haue two feet, as well as other Birds; but as soone as they are taken, they are cut off, with a great part of their body, whereof a litle is left with the head and necke, which being hardned and dried in the Sunne, seeme to be so bred. The Moores made the Ilanders beleene that they came out of Paradise, and therefore call them Manucodiata, or holie Birds, and haue them in religious accompt: They are very beautifull, with variety of fethers and colours. 1613 PURCHAS, Pilgrimage, p. 452.

Cockeram did not fail to include this remarkable bird in his menagerie of wonders, along with the "Griffin, a foure-footed Bird, being very fierce," the "Harpies, monstrous deuouring Birds," and the "Phoenix, the rarest bird in the world."

Mias, the orang-utan of Borneo.

The word mias, as the nativ name in one region of Borneo for the animal long known in English as the orang-utan or orang-outang, seems to hav entered into English use for the first time in the "Journal" of James Brooke, the rajah of Sarawak, as cited below. The "Journal" was publisht in 1848. The passages quoted wer written in 1840. Beyond a few casual mentions of mias, apparently based on Brooke's use (1856 Crawford, 1862 Rigg, quoted below), I find no other use of mias in English until Wallace, in 1869, in his work "The Malay Archipelago" gave it a permanent standing in literature.

It is clear from Brooke's general way of writing nativ words, that he meant mias to be pronounced according to English analogies, that is, to rime with bias. I inferd from Wallace's work that he used mias to represent the same pronounciation; and he has recently favord me with a note confirming this inference.

Mias then is pronounced mai'as, and answers to a Malayan or Bornean form which would be strictly transliterated maias or mayas. I find in my Malay or Malayan dictionaries just one entry of this form, namely, Malay مایس māias or māyas, in Dutch manner mājas, given as a word used on the north coast of Borneo, equivalent to the better-known term māwas used elsewhere as shown below.

مایس mājas, N. kust Borneo: māwas (ōrang ōetan).—
(T[uuk].) 1884 WALL and TUUK, 3:118.

This maías is but a Malay reflex of the Dayak name, of which I find mention in two vocabularies printed in an important compilation concerning Sarawak and British North Borneo, which has just been published, after all these pages are in type, and nearly all closed to additions. It will be seen that one entry gives the nominal English form also as maías:

Monkey (orang-utan), Dayak maías.

a. 1887 H. B. Low, Vocabularies, in Roth, op. cit., 2: App. p. 63.

In Hardeland's Dayak dictionary (1859) no form like maías or mias or māwas appears. The name there given for the orang-utan is kahio (p. 203). A smaller species is called kalawet (p. 213).

Crawfurd (1852) gives "miyas" as "the Bornean name of the orang-utan," and Favre (1875) gives in the list of forms under māwas the "Dayak mias." But I suspect Crawfurd's miyas and Favre's mias to be spurious forms, due to inadvertence in reversing the English mias of Brooke into the native original.

Māias or māyas, as the Dayak name on the north coast of Borneo, may be a purely local name not related to any other term, or it may be, as Tuuk assumes, an other form of the widely known term māwas, which is found in all the recent Malay dictionaries, but not before 1863.

1889 LANGEN, Woordenboek der Atjehsche taal, p. 253.

There is a different word miā, miyā, ميا, applied to an other species of ape, or used as a general name. It occurs as mea in Haex (1631), and runs through all the dictionaries.

The history of mias in English use begins, as I hav said, with the "Journal" of Rajah Brooke, in the portion written in 1840. The quotations follow. It is to be noted that Brooke's "Journal" is discontinuous and fragmentary, and often refers, in a casual and familiar way, to words and things which hav not before been mentiond and ar nowhere explaind.

Brooke's first mention of mias is in the following quotation, where the word is abruptly introduced as a synonym for what is previously cald (p. 213, 218) orang-outang:

While lazily awaiting the report of our Dyaks who were detached in search of the mias, we fell in with a party of Balows.

1840 BROOKE, Journal, in Mundy, Narrative of events in Borneo and Celebes (1848), 1:220.

In the next mention, and in one further on (p. 226), the word is used unchanged as a plural:

After our interview with the Balow other mias were discovered.

1840 Id., p. 221.

They fell the isolated tree, and the mias, confused, entangled, is beset by his pursuers, noosed, forked down, and made captive.

1840 Id., p. 226.

I further learn from the natives that at the full of the moon the mias roams a great deal, but at the time of new moon they are sluggish, and remain stationary in their nests....In the fruit season, which here commences about November, the mias are found close round the habitations of men, but at other seasons they retire more into the forest, and, from the appearance of their teeth, they must live on hard-rinded fruits.

1840 Id., p. 226. (Other instances on p. 225, 227, 229.)

Brooke speaks of "two distinct species" of the mias, the mias pappan, which he also calls simply pappan, and the mias rembi*, which he calls only rembi. As with mias, he uses the terms without previous explanation, as if they wer well known.

It must be borne in mind, however, that I have not seen the largest mias pappan.

1840 Id., p. 225.

The mias, both pappan and rembi (I assume the distinction), have nests or houses in the trees formed by twisted leaves and twigs, and resembling a rook's nest in everything but size.

1840 Id., p. 226.

The next mention of mias, in an English context, which I have noted, is in Crawford's gazetteer of the Archipelago (1856), p. 315. It probably refers to Brooke's use.

The next is in Rigg (1862), p. 328, who takes it from Brooke.

It was Mr. Wallace, as I have said, who gave mias a standing in English. He met the mias, beast and word, on the Simunjon river, not far from Sarawak, on the northwest coast of Borneo, on the 21st of March, 1855. I cite his first mention of the word, and some other instances.

In all these objects I succeeded beyond my expectations, and will now give some account of my experience in hunting the Orang-utan, or "Mias" as it is called by the natives [of Borneo]; and as this name is short, and easily pronounced, I shall generally use it in preference to Simia satyrus, or Orang-utan.

1869 WALLACE, Malay Archipelago (1890), p. 30-31.

And he was a giant, his head and body being full as large as a man's. He was of the kind called by the Dyaks "Mias Chappan," or "Mias Pappan," which has the skin of the face broadened out to a ridge or fold at each side.

1869 Id., p. 37.

The very day after my arrival in this place, I was so fortunate as to shoot another adult male of the small Orang, the Mias-kassir of the Dyaks.

1869 Id., p. 42.

In the Sádong, where I observed it, the Mias is only found where the country is low, level, and swampy, and at the same time covered with a lofty virgin forest.

1869 Id., p. 44.

It is a singular and very interesting sight to watch a Mias making his way leisurely through the forest. He walks deliberately along some of the larger branches, in the semi-erect attitude which the great length of his arms and the shortness of his legs cause him naturally to assume; and the disproportion between these limbs is increased by his walking on his knuckles, not on the palm of the hand, as we should do.

1869 Id., p. 45.

He said: "The Mias has no enemies; no animals dare attack it but the crocodile and the python. He always kills the crocodile by main strength, standing upon it, pulling open its jaws, and ripping up its throat." 1869 Id., p. 47. (Other instances on every page from 31 to 46.)

Johore....it is in its wild forests and inland mountains that we meet with a type of man by far the most primitive that these regions have to show. These are the Jacones, who, like the Orang-utan, or Mias of Borneo, are reported to dwell in trees.

1875 THOMSON, The Straits of Malacca, Indo-China, and China, p. 78.

The familiar name for the ape [orang-utan] is of Malay origin, and means 'wild man of the woods,' but to the Dyaks the orang is known as the Mias.

The term Mias, which is the Dyak name for the Orang utan of the Malays, in that part of Borneo to the N. E. of the Sarawak River (where it is most abundant and best known) is pronounced exactly as the English terms bias and lias.

Nory, a parrot of the Eastern islands cald also, and now exclusively, lory, from an other form of the same original Malayan word. See LORY.

The form nory, in the spelling nori (in plural noris), nury*, noory*, neury (with plural neories), and once noyra, in plural noyras, appears in English records in the latter end of the sixteenth century, much earlier than lory, but it has hitherto faild of due entry in English dictionaries. It comes through Portuguese, Italian, or New Latin. The New Latin norus*, in accusativ plural noros, is found before the middle of the fifteenth century (c. 1430); New Latin also noyra (1601); Port. nura*, pl. nure (1516 Barbosa), noyra (15.), nore (1878 Vieyra); Italian nuro (1598); Dutch noeri.

The Malay original is نوري nūri, nūri, written sometimes نور nūri. It is also transcribed nori (1631, 1833, 1882, etc.). The English forms nury*, noory*, neury rest on nūri; the forms nory, nori, on nori, which is rather the Javanese form. The related forms ar Achinese nuri (Langen), nori (Dias), Javanese nori, Balinese nori, Bugis nori, Macassar nori, also nuri; beside the forms named under LORY, namely, Malay لوري lūri, Jav. and Sund. luri, Sangi-Manganitu lurin. Parrot ... nuri, nori.

1833 [THOMSEN], Vocab. Eng. Bugis and Malay lang., p. 24.

The earliest mention of the nory, in a European language, is in Poggio, whose statement, as given by Conti and recently translated, is as follows:

In Bandan three kinds of parrot are found, some with red feathers and a yellow beak, and some parti-coloured which are called Nori, that is brilliant.

c. 1430 Conti, tr. in India in the XVI. Cent. (18. .), p. 17. (Y.)

The last words, in Poggio's original Latin, are: "quos Noros appellat hoc est lucidos," showing that Conti connected the word with the Pers. nûr="lux." 1886 YULE and BURNELL, Hobson-Jobson, p. 398.

The word appears in Italian dictionaries of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries as nuro. So Florio:

Nuro, a bird in Samatra like a poppingiay, but of fairer colour, and speaketh more plaine. 1598 FLORIO.

In his next edition, perhaps by accident, but perhaps in consequence of the hatred for definit statement which characterized the time, he omits the mention of place, and flies his bird all in the vast and wandering air. Parrots might "speak plain," but not the "resolute John Florio."

Nuro, a birde of a fairer colour then a Poping-iay and speaketh more plaine. 1611 FLORIO.

Orang, the same as ORANG-UTAN, which see.

Orang is a purely English reduction of the proper term orang-utan, arising from a vague notion that orang- in this term is the essential element.

Finally in regard to the geographical distribution of the higher quadrumana, I would contrast the peculiarly limited range of orangs and chimpanzees with the cosmopolitan character of mankind. The two species of orang, pithecus, are confined to Borneo, and Sumatra; the two species of chimpanzee, troglodytes, are limited to an intertropical tract of the western part of Africa.

18. . OWEN, On the gorilla, p. 52 (in Latham 1882, s. v. "orang or orang utan").

This mode of progression was, however, very unusual, and is more characteristic of the Hylobates than of the Orang.

1869 WALLACE, Malay Archipelago (1890), p. 31. (An other ex. p. 38.)

It may be safely stated, however, that the Orang never walks erect, unless when using its hands to support itself by branches overhead or when attacked. Representations of its walking with a stick are entirely imaginary.

1869 Id., p. 46.

On the whole, therefore, I think it will be allowed, that up to this time we have not the least reliable evidence of the existence of Orangs in Borneo more than 4 feet 2 inches high.

1869 Id., p. 49.

The height of the orang's cerebrum in front is greater in proportion than in either the chimpanzee or the gorilla.

1889 WALLACE, Darwinism, p. 452.

Orang-utan, the celebrated ape of Borneo and Sumatra, Simia satyrus.

This pleasing creature, without any effort on his part, has made a name for himself throughout the world. He has been known in English since the seventeenth century as orang-outang, orang-otang, ourang-outang, ouran-outang, oran-outang, and now more accurately, orang-utan, and has recently vindicated his more local name Mias, which has been set forth in a previous article. He appears under his old name in all the great languages of Europe; French orang-outang, and, mostly from English or French, Spanish orang-utan, orang-outang, Portuguese orang-otango, Catalan orangutà, Italian orangotano, Dutch orang-œtan, German orang-utang, Swedish and Danish orangutang, Russian orangutangû, etc. The form orang-outang for orang-utan, -utan shows the English tendency to make compound names of outland origin rime within themselves, if the parts hav any suggestiv similarity.

The original Malay form of the name is اورڠ اوتن ōrang ūtan, or اورڠ هوتن ōrang hūtan, man of the woods' or 'of the forest' or 'of the bush' or 'of the wilderness,' that is 'bushman'; or, giving ūtan an adjectiv force, 'wild man.' The term is in common Malay use in its literal sense to designate a human being who lives in the woods, a wild man, a savage. Indeed it means just the same thing as savage—Latin silvaticus, sc. homo, 'man of the woods.'

The special application to the silvan and arboreal anthropoid is not to be regarded as poetic or scientific. It is no doubt merely a simple "nativ" name. The Malays who saw these creatures thought they wer real "wild men," and cald them so. It is a long way from this nativ simplicity to the lately attaind scientific satisfaction reflected in the almost synonymous name "anthropoid."

But this particular application of ōrang ūtan to the ape does not appear to be, or ever to hav been, familiar to the Malays generally. Crawford (1852) and Swettenham (1887) omit it, Pijnappel says it is "Low Malay," and Klinkert (1893) denies the use entirely. This uncertainty is explai'd by the limited area in which the animal exists within even nativ observation. Mr. Wallace could find no natives in Sumatra who "had ever heard of such an animal," and no "Dutch officials who knew anything about it." Then the name came to European knowledge more than two hundred and sixty years ago; in which time probably more than one Malay name has faded out of general use or wholly disappear'd, and many other things hav happend.

[See full quot. under MIAS.]

The earliest European mention of the name orang-utan, occurs, in the spelling ourang-outang, in the New Latin of Bontius (1631). He mentions the belief of the "Javans," meaning rather the Malays, that the orang-utans can talk, but that they will not talk, lest they should be compelled to work. Sagacious creatures! yet short of that Occidental wisdom which prompts many men to talk, and thereby avoid work.

Loqui vero eos easque posse lavani aiunt, sed non velle, ne ad labores cogantur; ridicule mehercules. Nomen ei induunt Ourang Outang, quod hominem silvae significat.

1840 BROOKE, Journal, in Mundy, Narrative of events in Borneo and Celebes (1848), 1:218. (Also 1:213.)

Of course Wallace, the eminent author of "The Malay Archipelago, the land of the orang-utan and the bird of paradise," has much to say of this important man of the woods, though, as before said, he prefers to call him mias.

One of my chief objects in coming to stay at Simunjon was to see the Orang-utan (or great man-like ape of Borneo) in his native haunts, to study his habits, and obtain good specimens of the different varieties and species of both sexes, and of the adult and young animals.

1869 WALLACE, Malay Archipelago (1890), p. 30.

The Orang-utan is known to inhabit Sumatra and Borneo, and there is every reason to believe that it is confined to these great islands, in the former of which, however, it seems to be much more rare. In Borneo it has a wide range, inhabiting many districts on the south-west, south-east, north-east, and north-west coasts, but appears to be chiefly confined to the low and swampy forests. 1869 Id., p. 44.

As the Orang-utan is known to inhabit Sumatra, and was in fact first discovered there, I made many inquiries about it; but none of the natives had ever heard of such an animal, nor could I find any of the Dutch officials who knew anything about it. 1869 Id., p. 103.

It is also written, more correctly, but less often, pengolin. The proper English form would be pengoling*, pronounced peng-

The Malay word is ڤنگولڠ peng-gōling, transcribed also pēng-gūling; Katingan pengiling. It means 'roller,' or, more literally, 'roll-up.' The word is formed from gōling, roll, wrap, with the denominative prefix pe-, which takes before g the form peng-. The form "pangūlang," in Yule (1886) and Webster (1890) is erroneous.

1771 PENNANT, Synopsis of quadrupeds, p. 329.

The pangolin, which has been usually called the scaly lizard, Mr. Buffon very judiciously restores to that denomination, by which it is known in the countries where it is found. The pangolin, which is a native of the torrid climates of the ancient continent, is of all other animals the best protected from external injury by nature; it is about three or four feet long, or taking in the tail from six to eight.

V. Edentata. Pengolin.—Of the Edentata the only example in Ceylon is the scaly ant-eater, called by the Singhalese, Caballaya, but usually known by its Malay name of Pengolin, a word indicative of its faculty, when alarmed, of "rolling itself up" into a compact ball, by bending its head towards its stomach, arching its back into a circle, and securing all by a powerful fold of its mail-covered tail....Of two specimens which I kept alive at different times, one about two feet in length, from the vicinity of Kandy, was a gentle and affectionate creature, which, after wandering over the house in search of ants, would attract attention to its wants by climbing up my knee, laying hold of my leg with its prehensile tail. The other, more than double that length, was caught in the jungle near Chilaw, and brought to me in Colombo.

Civet-cats were very abundant; and the nocturnal scaly ant-eater or pangolin (Manis) was pretty often captured in the evening, while clumsily climbing on the trees, licking up with amazing rapidity streams of ants, which are its sole food—an interesting form especially to the embryologist and the genealogist, who find in its structures surviving "marks of ancientness," which have greatly helped to unravel the mammalian pedigree.

gebezigd van iedere daad, die naar de heerschende denkbeelden onder de Inlanders verkeerd is, en gewoonlijk nadeelige gevolgen na zich sleept. Zoo noemen zij bijvoorb. kassipalli: het vertrappen van eten, het loopen in de zon op het midden van den dag, het doodten van eenig dier in een huis waar een kind is van beneden de 40 dagen. (Tar.)

1859 MATTHES, Makassaarsch-Hollandsch woordenboek, p. 65.

Pali....Kapali, ongeoorloofd, verboden: morapopālīka, iets verbieden, als ongeoorloofd aangeven; rapopalīka, verboden zijn van iets. NB. Sang. pelli, Day. pali, Mak. palli, Bug. pemali, Mal. Sund. pamali, Bat. hubali. 1894 KRUYT, Woordenlijst van de Baretaal, p. 51.

A custom of such a nature as tabu would reach the most ignorant and childish minds; and the words associated with it would all the more easily suffer alteration. All these varied forms occur within the Amboina group of islands:

Mamori, gewijd (Ml. pamali)—momori (H. W. K.) — momoli (P.) — momodi (A.) — tamori (T. R.) — ori (Kr.).

1864-65 A. VAN EKRIS, Woordentijst.... Ambonsche eilanden, p. 306.

Taking these forms together, in the series pamali, penali, pomali, momoli, momodi, momori, mamori, tamori, ori, and noting the initial relations p:m, and p:t, and the medial relations p:m, p:b, it is difficult to resist the comparison of the form tamori with the Polynesian tabu, tapu, of which other forms are tambu, tabui, tobui, and kapu. See the forms in Tregear, Maori-Polynesian comparative dictionary (1891), p. 472, 473.

Wallace mentions the custom of pomali in Timor, and Forbes in Buru.

A prevalent custom [in Timor] is the "pomali," exactly equivalent to the "taboo" of the Pacific islanders, and equally respected. It is used on the commonest occasions, and a few palm leaves stuck outside a garden as a sign of the "pomali" will preserve its produce from thieves as effectually as the threatening notice of man-traps, spring guns, or a savage dog, would do with us.

1869 WALLACE, Malay Archipelago (1890), p. 149.

The custom of "tabu," called here [in Timor] "pomali," is very general, fruit trees, houses, crops, and property of all kinds being protected from depredation by this ceremony, the reverence for which is very great.

1869 Id., p. 451.

Just at the summit I came on a curious Pomali sign set up in the forest to protect probably some part of it from depredation. Its exact meaning I could not find out. [A description follows.]

1885 FORBES, A naturalist's wanderings in the Eastern Archipelago, p. 400.

Their most dreaded and respected oath is made, holding the sharp top of a sago palm leaf in the hand, on the sacred knife and spear taken from the Matakau; for they believe in the power of these pomali-weapons to harm them at any unguarded moment. 1885 Id., p. 395 (Buru).

I was not permitted to go into their fields, as strangers and coast people are tabooed, for fear of some evil befalling their *poomali*ed [sic] seeds.

1885 Id., p. 403 (Buru).

In Malay Archipelago the custom of pomali in many respects resembles tapu.

Prau, a boat of the Malayan Archipelago.

The word has been in English use, with reference to Malayan waters, for 300 years, in many forms, partly intended for Malay, and partly copied from the Spanish and Portuguese transliterations.

The English forms have been prau (properly pronounced as written, in two syllables, prā'u, but in English as one syllable, pran, riming nearly with cow), prave, and with the same pronunciation, proe, which was, however, also taken to rime with crow, and so was written also proe; while an other form reproduced the Spanish and Portuguese termination -ao as -oa, namely proa (compare Curagou for Curacao, Krakatoa for Krakatau).

An other form, after the Spanish, was parao. In the present century the form prahu, in more exact transliteration of the Malay, is used beside prau.

The Malay form is پراهُ prāhu, pērāhu, or with omission of the faint h, prāu, pērāu. The final vowel is sometimes omitted in writing, پرا prāhu, pērāhu. It is the common name for 'a boat' throughout the Archipelago; Achinese prahu, Javanese prahu, parahu, Sundanese prahu, Balinese p'rahu, pedahu, Dayak prahu, prau, paraū, Sampit prahu, Tidunga padau. There is a Chinese pilau, pilu, from the Malayan; whence again Malay pilau and pilang.

The word prau appears to be original in Malayan; but there are similar words in Indian dialects which have suggested a borrowing at one end or the other. Rigg cites the Singhalese "parāwa, a flat bottomed boat" (p. 380), and Yule the Malayalam "pāru, a boat" (p. 555).

The word first appeared in European use in the Portuguese, Spanish, and Italian form parao. The Spanish form parao is in familiar use in the Philippine islands:

Parao (el).—Barque marine des indigènes, espèce de brick (Buzeta, II,
p. 141), de 1 à 44 tonneaux, peut-être Praue?

1882 BLUMENTRITT, Vocab. de...l'espagnol des Philippines, tr. Hugot (1884), p. 60.

From the Portuguese the form parao was taken into English, in an early translation:

Next daye....there came in two little Paraos.

1582 N. L[ITCHFIELD], tr. Castañeda [1551-1561], The first booke of the historie of the discoverie and conquest of the East Indias, fol. 62v. (Y.)

The word also appeared in Portuguese as parô (1606). From this, or from parao, came the English form paro, which had some run:

We left our boats or Paroes. 1599 HAKLUYT, Voyages, 2:1:258. (S. D.)

A little Paro, which is to say, a voyage Barke.

1625 PURCHAS, Pilgrims, 1:10:1725. (S. D.)

The most common form during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries was prau (pronounced prau, and probably often prō, riming with raw), also written proe (pronounced like prau, namely prau, but also, no doubt, prō, riming with crow) and proe (after the last pronunciation mentioned).

The next morning while we were at anchor, a Malay proe, with about thirty men on board, mounted with swivels, was discovered at no great distance from us.

See other quotations in Yule and the Stanford dictionary.

From the form proe or proe, associated with the Spanish and occasional English form parao on the one hand, and perhaps on the other hand with the different word proie, Spanish proa (L. prora), the bow of a vessel, arose the English form proa, which has been the accidentally "preferred" form in nineteenth-century dictionaries.

Most travelers in the Eastern seas, and all precise writers, of the present century, use the precise Malay form prau, some with still greater precision prahu. Prao is also found.

Rattan, a well-known East Indian palm, of the genus Calamus and allied genera; also, and usually, the 'canes' or strips made from the stem of the palm, used for innumerable purposes.

The word is also spelt ratán. The spelling rattan is more common, and is preferred perhaps as more exactly intimating the clear pronunciation of the first vowel—ră"-tăn' or răt-tăn', not ra-tăn'.

The accentuation appears to be due to the French. Other forms in English have been rattoon (implying an earlier form in French or English, raton*), a word now differentiated; also rotan, rotang, rottang. Rotan represents precisely the Malay form; rotang, rottang follow the French rotang. The Dutch, Danish, and Swedish forms are rotting, apparently after the French rotin (which may be from the English rotan). The Spanish form is rota. It appears in an obsolete English reflex, rota.

The Malay form is روتن rōtan, Batak hotang, Javanese rotan, Kawi latung, Macassar rau kang, Amboina lotan. It is explained as a contraction of rautan*, 'that which is pared and trimmed,' from rāut, Macassar rāuk, Bugis dāu, 'pare, trim with a knife.' The allusion is to the prepared form in which the rattan is used. The English word strip, 'a slender prepared piece of wood,' has an analogous etymology. The mode of cutting and stripping is described by Crawford, Hist. (1820), 3:423. See also quotations from Klinkert (1893) and Matthes (1859), below.

Sapi-utan, the wild ox of Celebes and of some adjacent islands.

Malay سائي اوتن sāpi ūtan, 'ox, of the woods,' 'wild ox';

سائي sāpi, 'ox, bull, cow, cattle, especially wild cattle' (see SAPI); اوتن ūtan, 'woods, forest, wilderness'; the same element as that seen in ORANG-UTAN, q. v.

Sapi ūtan, 'wild cattle,' appears to be no technical name, but merely a general appellation among the Malays of the regions where the animals are found. It is noteworthy that the name sāpi ūtan is not given in any of the Malay dictionaries named in my list.

I inquired about skulls, and soon obtained . . . a fine one of the rare and curious "Sapi-utan" (Anoa depressicornis): Of this animal I had seen two living specimens at Menado, and was surprised at their great resemblance to small cattle, or still more to the Eland of South Africa. Their Malay name signifies "forest ox," and they differ from very small high-bred oxen principally by the low-hanging dewlap, and straight pointed horns which slope back over the neck.

1869 WALLACE, Malay Archipelago (1890), p. 202.

On the way they caught a young Sapi-utan and five wild pigs. Of the former I preserved the head. This animal is entirely confined to the remote mountain forests of Celebes and one or two adjacent islands, which form part of the same group. In the adults the head is black, with a white mark over each eye, one on each cheek, and another on the throat. The horns are very smooth and sharp when young, but become thicker and ridged at the bottom with age. Most naturalists consider this curious animal to be a small ox, but from the character of the horns, the fine coat of hair and the descending dewlap, it seemed closely to approach the antelopes.

There dwells the sapi utung or "wild ox," probably not indigenous, but descended from the tame sapi introduced from Java and Madura.

Samang (ook Ab[oe]ngsch], v. H.), de siyamang.

1891 HELFRICH, Lampongsch-Hollandsch woordenlijst, p. 100.

The siamang has in recent years obtained his due share of English notice.

A very curious ape, the Siamang, was also rather abundant, but it is much less bold than the monkeys, keeping to the virgin forests and avoiding villages. This species is allied to the little long-armed apes of the genus Hylobates, but is considerably larger, and differs from them by having the two first fingers of the feet united together, nearly to the end, whence its Latin name, Siamanga syndactyla.

1869 WALLACE, Malay Archipelago (1890),
p. 103. [An other ex. p. 103.]

One well-marked species, the largest of the genus, is the siamang ([Hylobates] syndactylus) of Sumatra, which is remarkable as being the ape with the best developed chin and widest breast-bone. It has also the second and third toes united by skin down to the last joint of each.

1878 Encyc. Brit., 2:150.

An untamed siamang which lives on the roof, but has mustered up courage to-day to come down into the verandah, has jumped like a demon on the retriever's back, and, riding astride, is beating him with a ruler.

1883 BIRD, Golden Chersonese, p. 309.

Every now and then a curve of the road brought me on a colony of Siamang apes (Siamanga syndactyla), some of them hanging by one arm to a dead branch of a high-fruited tree with eighty unobstructed feet between them and the ground, making the woods resound with their loud barking howls.

1885 FORBES, A naturalist's wanderings in the Eastern Archipelago, p. 129.

The Siamang comes next in size to the Orang-utan, which is the largest of the great apes living in this part of the world, and which is found elsewhere only in the Malacca peninsula, the Orang-utan being confined to Sumatra and Borneo.

1885 Id., p. 129.

The Siamang is a very powerful animal when full grown, and has long jet-black glancing hair. In height it stands little over three feet three or four inches, but the stretch of its arms across the chest measures no less than five feet five to six inches, endowing it with a great power of rapid progression among the branches of the trees. Its singular cry is produced by its inflating, through a valve from the windpipe, a large sac extending to its lips and cheeks, situated below the skin of the throat, then suddenly expelling the enclosed air in greater or less jets, so as to produce the singular modulations of its voice.

Sumpit, a blowpipe, the same as SUMPITAN, q. v.; also one of the darts or small arrows discharged from the blowpipe.

The regular Malay term for the Malayan blowpipe, and the one by which it is chiefly known in English, is sumpitan, as given below; but sumpit also occurs in the same sense. In Achinese it is sumpit or setumpit. In Borneo and Celebes sumpit, with many variations, is the prevalent name. It is explained as 'a narrow thing,' from the Malay سُمُپِت sumpit, sempit, 'narrow,' which answers to Javanese supit, Dayak sipit, Malagási sumpitra, 'narrow.'

1849 BURNS, Jour. Ind. arch., 3: 142 (in Roth, Natives of Sarawak and British North Borneo (1896), 2: 185).

In "Sarawak" (p. 330) Sir Hugh Low was, I think, the first traveller to call attention to the fact that the little iron hook fastened at the outlet end of the sumpit is a "sight." 1896 ROTH, ib., 2:184.

Sumpit in the sense of 'dart' or 'arrow,' appears to be a mistake made, or followd, by Captain Mundy in the quotations given. The Malay سبقت sumpit does not mean 'dart' or 'arrow.'

Every Dyak house, of large dimensions, is a fortress in itself.... The inhabitants blew showers of sumpits into our boats as they passed, wounding several men.... To spare their houses after they had attacked us with their poisoned darts, would have been construed by them to a fear of landing amongst them. 1846 MUNDY, Journal, in Narrative of events in Borneo and Celebes (1848), 2:226.

Several of our men were wounded by the sumpits; however, the arrows, on being drawn out, left a very small incision, which a kind messmate instantly sucked, and the poison (a black substance made from the upas tree) was extracted. These arrows are nine inches long, of tough wood, not thicker than moderate sized wire, very neatly made, and generally barbed with sharpened fish bones. At twenty yards' distance, the barb meeting the bare skin, would bury half the arrow in the flesh, but would not penetrate cloth at the distance of forty yards: the extreme range may be eighty or ninety yards.... The quiver for these arrows is really curious, beautifully made from the large bamboo, and besides the darts usually contain[s] a variety of amulets or charms in the shape of pebbles, bones, and odd pieces of wood, with the skins of monkeys. 1846 Id., 2:226-7.

Sumpitan, the instrument used for blowing arrows. A blow-pipe. This instrument was formerly used extensive[ly] in ancient Java, as it now even [even now] exists, in common use, among the rude inhabitants of Borneo and Celebes. In Java it is, now a days, only a child's plaything.

Blow-pipe....Dusun soputan....Sulus sumpitan....

1896 SWETTENHAM, Vocabularies (in Roth, Natives of Sarawak and British North Borneo, 2: App. p. 159).

The sumpitan is described and pictured, and quotations ar given, in the extensiv work of Mr. H. Ling Roth last cited, (2: 184-188). The poisons used and their sources ar also described (2: 188-201).

The English quotations for sumpitan begin with Herbert (1638).

And (in Makasser) which is no lesse infernall, the men use long canes or trunks (cald Sempitans), out of which they can (and use it) blow a little pricking quill, which if it draw the lest drop of blood from any part of the body, it makes him (though the strongest man living) die immediately; some venoms operate in an houre, others in a moment, the veynes and body (by the virulence of the poyson) corrupting and rotting presently, to any man's terrour and amazement, and feare to live where such abominations predominate.

1638 SIR T. HERBERT, Travels, p. 329. (Y. p. 729.)

This tribe of Kayans is moreover described as being much more expert with the sumpitan than other Dyaks; their usual mode of warfare being rather to lie in wait for their enemy in the jungle, or to track him through the bush. To the sumpitan a spear is attached. The arrows are contained in a bamboo case hung at their side, and at the bottom of this quiver is the poison of the upas. The arrow is a thin piece of wood, sharp-pointed, and inserted in a socket, made of the pith of a tree, which fits the tube of the blow-pipe. They carry a small calabash for these arrow-heads, and on going into action prepare a sufficient number, and fresh dip the points in the poison, as its deadly influence does not continue long. When they face an enemy, the box at the side is open; and, whether advancing or retreating, they fire the poisoned missiles with great rapidity and precision: some hold four spare arrows between the fingers of the hand which grasps the sumpitan, whilst others take their side-case.

1841 BROOKE, Journal, in Narrative of events in Borneo and Celebes (1848), 1:260-1.

In advancing, the sumpitan is carried at the mouth and elevated, and they will discharge at least five arrows to one compared with a musket. Beyond a distance of twenty yards they do not shoot with certainty from the lightness of the arrow, but I have frequently seen them practice at the above-named range, and they usually struck near the centre of the crown, none of the arrows being more than an inch or two from each other. On a calm day, the utmost range may be a hundred yards. The poison is considered deadly by the Kayans, but the Malays do not agree in this belief. My own impression is that the consequences resulting from a wound are greatly exaggerated, though if the poison be fresh, death may occasionally ensue; but decidedly, when it has been exposed for any time to the air it loses its virulence.

1841 Id., 1:261.

All the tribes who use the sumpitan, from their peculiar mode of fighting, and the dread of the weapon, are called Nata Hutan, or "Wood devils." Besides the sumpitan they also wear the "Ilang," or sword....

1841 Id., 1:262. (Also, 1:164.)

In the work cited, opposit p. 261, there is a picture of a "Dyak blowing the sumpitan." His cheeks are puffed out and his hair streams in the wind. Two heads hang from his girdle.

The length of the longest sumpitan I saw was between seven and eight feet, and much resembled the cherry-stick pipes of Turkey. The beauty and straightness of the bore is remarkable, and in order to give the greatest velocity to the arrow, the head of it is made to fit exactly to the size of the tube, and is formed of a sort of pith, or of very soft wood.

1846 MURDY, Journal, in Narrative of events in Borneo and Celebes (1848), 2:227.

It was at one of the positions, where the Dyaks were assembled in force, that a volley of musketry passing over our heads, and striking the water beyond our oars, showed us we were in the neighborhood of more dangerous weapons than the native sumpitan. 1846 Id., 2:228.

Their [the Samangs'] weapon is the sumpitan, a blow-gun, from which poisoned arrows are expelled.

Sumpitan is referred to by Yule (p. 726), but it is not entered. It is in the S. D.

Tokay is an English spelling of the Malay توكي tōkē, also written توك tōkeḵ, and تك tēkeḵ, with the final ḵ often silent (compare under ABADA); Javanese tēkeḵ, in Sunda toké, Bali tuké, Bugis and Macassar toké. Raffles describes the process of manufacture of this strong meat as mildly as if he were speaking of cheese :

Trasi or blāchang is prepared in many situations along the northern coast, but is mostly required for the consumption of the interior. It is prepared from prawns or shrimps, and extensive fisheries for the purpose are established in many parts of the coast. The shrimps being taken are strewn with salt, and exposed to the sun till dry; they are then pounded in wooden mortars, dressed, and formed into masses resembling large cheeses; in this state they constitute an article of trade, and are distributed through the country. The putrescent fluid remaining after the expression strongly impregnated with the odour of the shrimps, is evaporated to the consistence of a jelly, and affords a favourite sauce called pétis. An inferior kind of trási is prepared from small fish, and, when made into the form of small balls, is called blények. Trási bláro is of a reddish colour, and much esteemed at the native capitals.

1817 RAFFLES, Hist. of Java, 1:98, 99.

A vile odour which permeates the whole air within a wide area of the market-place, is apt to be attributed to these piles of fish; but it really proceeds from another compound sold in round black balls, called trassi.

In the following dictionary entry, the word is used in English context, in the Anglicized spelling unka:

Siámang سيامع a baboon. In Pérak there is a legend which tells of a battle between the Siámang and the Unka, the result being that the former species are only found on the left bank of the river and the latter only on the right. 1881 SWETTENHAM (1887), 2:105.

Forbes uses the Dutch and French spelling ongka.

The Siamang and the Ongka (Hyalobates variegatus), an allied but smaller ape, are the most interesting of the Quadramana to be met with in this region, the Orang-utan not being found so far in the south.

1885 FORBES, A naturalist's wanderings in the Eastern Archipelago, p. 156.

Two recent English dictionaries identify the ungka with the siamang; but at home the ungka is a different being.

Upas, a vegetable poison famous for its supposed extraordinary qualities; also the tree supposed to produce this poison, the celebrated “bohon-upas” of rhetorical allusion. See BOHON-UPAS.

The facts and the fictions about upas the poison, and upas the poison-tree, more properly cald the upas-tree or the bohon-upas, appear in the citations below and in those under the word last mentiond.

The Malay word اڤاس āpas means simply ‘poison.’ It commonly refers to vegetable poisons, because such ar more common. It is Javanese hupas, Sundanese upas, Balinese hupas, poison. In the Lampong language upas means ‘sickness.’

The Malay name for "the poison-tree," or any poison-tree, is فوهن اوشس pōhun ūpas, pūhun ūpas, represented in English by BOHON UPAS. The names of two poison-trees, the Javanese anchar (Malay also انچار anchar) and chetik, appear, occasionally, in English books. They are omitted from this paper.

The Sundanese name for the poison-tree is bulo ongko (Rigg, p. 70).

From the fabulous account of the poison-tree, the bohon-upas, given to the world a hundred years ago, a part of which is quoted in the article BOHON-UPAS, the word upas was taken into English use by Erasmus Darwin and others as the name of the tree.

Fierce in dread silence on the blasted heath
Fell Upas sits, the Hydra Tree of death ;
Lo ! from one root, the envenom'd soil below,
A thousand vegetative serpents grow.

1789 DARWIN, Loves of the plants ; in The botanic garden, Part II. (Y.)

This boundless upas, this all-blasting tree.

1818 BYRON, Childe Harold, 4:126.

Parbaya. Aye, I have heard
Of this your cruel mercy ;—'tis to seek
That tree of Java, which, for many a mile,
Sheds pestilence ;—for, where the Upas grows,
It blasts all vegetation with its own,
And, from its desert confines, e'en those brutes
That haunt the desert most shrink off and tremble.

1822 COLMAN, The law of Java, 1:2. (Y.)

The word first appears in an English dictionary in Worcester (1846).

Here and there [in Java], about 5000 feet, appeared purple violets (V. alata) increasing in abundance with the ascent through woods of magnolias and chestnuts, . . . on whose floor the dreaded Upas dropped its fruits. Beneath the shady canopy of this tall fig no native will, if he knows it, dare to rest, nor will he pass between its stem and the wind, so strong is his belief in its evil influence.

1885 FORBES, A naturalist's wanderings in the Eastern Archipelago, p. 112.

An account follows of a particular upas-tree "in the center of a tea-estate," and of the manner in which two Chinamen cut it down without suffering any harm.

Upas. This word is now, like Juggernaut, chiefly used in English as a customary metaphor, and to indicate some institution that the speaker wishes to condemn in a compendious manner. [The article continues at great length.] 1886 YULE and BURNELL, Hobson-Jobson, p. 726.

Upas in its proper sense, 'a poison,' especially a vegetable poison, is also used in English books.

Of the plants of the Indian islands two at least afford a most subtle poison, either taken into the stomach or circulation, the Anchar and the Chetik. The word Upas in the Javanese, and some other languages of the western portion of the Archipelago, is not a specific term, but the common name for poison of any description whatever.

1820 CRAWFURD, Hist. of the Indian Archipelago, 1:467.

To produce the fullest effects, the upas poison, of either kind, must be recent and well preserved.

1820 Id., 1:468.

The Chetik is a large creeping shrub.... It is the bark of the root of this plant which affords the upas or poison, which is an extract of nearly the consistence of syrup, obtained by boiling it with water.

1820 Id., 1:468.

The proper English name of the tree, when not fully translated poison-tree, is upas-tree, which is a half-translation of what is also transferd bodily, though perverted, as bohon-upas.

From that accursed venom springs

The Upas Tree of Death.

1800 SOUTHEY, Thalaba, 9:200.

Such, unhappily for fiction, is the true account of the upas tree, the bark of which is used by the natives of the countries in which it grows as wearing apparel, and beneath the shade of which the husbandman may repose himself with as much security as under that of coco-palm or bamboo. Every thing we know of the true history of the upas tree proclaims the egregious mendacity of the man who propagated the fable respecting it, which has obtained currency in Europe, and the extraordinary credulity of those who listened to his extravagant fiction.

1820 CRAWFURD, Hist. of the Indian Archipelago, 1:471.

In Borneo, Celebes, and other places this or an other vegetable poison, and the tree which produces it, ar known as إيڤو Ipoh, Batak ipu, Dayak ipo, Macassar ipo. Some identify this word with اوپس upas. It is not impossible. The word سيره sirih has a Jav. variant suruh, and the word ماوس māwas has a variant ماو māwa (see Mias). But the similarity may be merely accidental. Ipoh has a history of its own, which I hav had to omit.

Wauwau, an East Indian ape, the agile gibbon, Hylobates agilis.

The name is also speld wouwou, wowwow, wahwah, and wawah. It should be pronounced with the right Roman sound of the diphthong, wau-wau, riming with bow-wow; but it is also, apparently, pronounced wahwā, riming with haha.

The animal is so cald from its note—wau wau. An other ape, the kahau, also gets its name from its “nativ wood-notes wild.”

See KAHAU. The English bow-wow is a similar imitativ term, applied to the utterance of the dog. Forbes speaks (p. 129) of the "loud barking howls" of the siamang, an ape of the same genus as the wauwau.

The Malay word is اواو*, wauwau, given by Tiedtke (1872) only in the Dutch spelling wou-wou beside au-wau. I find elsewhere in Malay only the other form اواو* auwau. As an imitativ name it would be easily varied. The Javanese form is wawa. In Lampong it is ûkau.

The wauwau indeed has more than a note. It has notes. It sings the scale. One writer, quoted below, says it "is the only brute which may be said to sing." But there are other brutes which have been said to sing.

Dutch forms of the word are wauwau, wauwau, wouwouw.

An other form of the name is given by Crawford and Wall, the reduplicated ûwa-ûwa. Raffles gives it as a name for the orang-utan. In Achin a certain bird of the night is called ûwak-ûwak (1889 LANGEN, p. 18).

An other variation of the name appears in the Lampong ûkau (Dutch spelling oekaw).

'Oekaw, de wawwaw (een apensoort).

1891 HELFRICH, Lampongsch-Hollandsch woordenboek, p. 80.

The following are instances of the word in English use:

The wawah, a kind of gibbon, several Scenopithecus (as the long-nosed ape [KAHAU] and the golden-black or chrysomelas), and the large-eyed Stenops tardigradus [kukang], are also worthy of mention.

1878 Encyc. Brit., 4: 57, art. BORNEO.

The apes are represented [in Java] by the wou-wou (Hylobates leuciscus) . . . and most general of all Mucacus cynomolgus. The existence of bands of the wou-wou is only too distinctly proved in the second zone by the loud and cacophonous outcry from which their name is derived.

Ūngka  a monkey—the “Wah-Wah.”

1881 SWETTENHAM (1887), 2: 125.

Mawa  a tailless monkey of the kind known as “Wah-wah.”

1881 SWETTENHAM (1887), 2: 63.

I can hardly write, for a little wah-wah, the most delightful of apes, is hanging with one long, lean arm round my throat, while with its disengaged hand it keeps taking my pen, dipping it in the ink, and scrawling over my letter. It is the most winsome of creatures.

1883 BIRD, The Golden Chersonese, p. 297.

They seem frightfully jealous of the sweet little wah-wah Eblis.

1883 Id., p. 310.

Another Sumatran species [Hylobates] agilis, the Wou-Wou, is the only brute which may be said to sing. Its full musical notes range by semi-tones through an octave, and in ascending and descending the scale these are taken perfectly.

1884-88 Riverside nat. hist., 5: 522.

Forbes describes the cry of the wauwau as a plaintive wail; and figures it as “woo-oo-ut, woo-ut, wut,” repeated.

In the early mornings here, I was at first constantly awakened by the loud plaintive wailings of a colony of Wau-waus, one of the Gibbons (Hylobates leuciscus) from the neighbouring forest, as they came down to the stream to drink. On first hearing their cried [read cries] one can scarcely believe that they do not proceed from a band of uproarious and shouting children. Their “Woo-oo-ūt—woo-ut—woo-oo-ūt—wut-wut-wut—wut-wut-wut,” always more wailing on a dull heavy morning previous to rain, was just such as one might expect from the sorrowful countenance that is characteristic of this group of the Quadrumana. They have a wonderfully human look in their eyes....

1885 FORBES, A naturalist's wanderings in the Eastern Archipelago, p. 70 (Java).

The habits of the Wau-wau closely resemble those of the Siamang of Sumatra.

1885 Id., p. 71.

Miss Bird mentions a monkey called “ouf,” which she believes to be the “agile gibbon,” that is, our wauwau. Ouf seems to represent the ordinary utterance of the animal, while wau-wau or wawa represents its cry.

The circle is completed by a handsome black monkey tied to a post, and an ape which they call an ouf, from the solitary monosyllable which it utters, but which I believe to be the "agile gibbon," a creature so delicate that it has never yet survived a voyage to England. [A description follows.] 1883 BIRD, The Golden Chersonese, p. 218.

Eblis condescends to notice me to-day, and occasionally sits on my shoulder murmuring "ouf! ouf!" the sweet sound which means all varieties of affection and happiness. They say wah-wah distinctly, and scream with rage like children, but have none of the meaningless chatter of monkeys. 1883 Id., p. 332.

Eblis . . . shows the most exquisite devotion to his master, caresses him with his pretty baby hands, murmurs ouf in the tenderest of human tones, and sits on his shoulder or on his knee as he writes, looking up with a strange wistfulness in his eyes, as if he would like to express himself in something better than a monosyllable. 1883 Id., p. 322.

Here the list of Malayan words in English chosen for statement in some detail comes to an end. Space has its limits. But I must not close without giving a list of all the principal Malayan words in English. Even this requires selection. I bar out words which, though found in English books, and entitled to be called "Malayan words in English," are sporadic, or special, or unimportant, or evidently have no future. In particular, words which occur only in systematic histories or descriptions of the Malay Archipelago such as Marsden's History of Sumatra (1783), Raffle's History of Java (1817), Crawford's History of the Indian Archipelago (1825), and his Descriptive dictionary of the Indian Islands (1856), and are unsupported by mention in English works of a more general nature, are excluded.

The following list, then, contains all the principal Malayan words in English, with the exclusions above said. I give first the English word in its best spelling, ignoring variations if not important; then a word or two of definition or identification, then the Malay word in Arabic characters, and finally the same in Roman characters, spaced. The English words are in Clarendon type. Variant forms and references are in small capitals. The words which have been explained in this paper are marked with a star.

The Malayan words in English, enumerated in the preceding list, ar 141 in number; but these ar selected from more than 300 which ar entered in my records, with etymologies and proof quotations. Beyond the 300 lie a greater number of Malayan words in English excluded, as before said, because they ar sporadic, or special, or unimportant, or hav no probable future in English. Of the 142 mentiond, or of the 300 recorded, only 56 ar explaind in this paper.

But in addition to all these Malayan words in English, there ar many other words in English which ar Malayan in a secondary sense. I mean the words which hav come into English use, directly or indirectly, from the Malay or a Malayan language, but which hav their ultimate source outside of the Archipelago, in Chinese, Japanese, Arabic, Persian, or some of the languages of India or of America. To set forth these words, in any of the principal classes mentiond, would require a paper in itself. I can not do more here than to name the chief words in each class.

From the Chinese, through the Malay, we hav the words chop, a seal, warrant; hoey, a guild; japan, varnish; kongsee, a public company; lichi, lingking, and longan, fruits; sampan, a boat; sapac, sapeca, a coin; tea, the drink; toko, a shop; also, through Malay and Japanese, soy (see page 65 f.).

From India, through the Malay, come bamboo; bankshall, a warehouse; bilimbi, bilimbing, a fruit; candoreen, a weight; gadong, a warehouse, with its English adaptation godown; garroo-wood; jambu; mace; mango; sapan; sarong; and many more.

From Arabic, through the Malay, come bahar, a weight; monsoon; passar, etc., and, as used in books relating to the Archipelago, arrack, sultan, etc. From Persian, nakoda, a shipmaster; shabandar, an officer; etc.

From American languages, through the Malay, come caju and cashew, ultimately the same as acajou; chili, red pepper; papaya, papaw.

Some of the Malayan words which I hav treated present in their nativ history and in their migrations to foreign lands philologic features of great interest; but I hav no room to deal with them here. Some of these features wer toucht upon in a paper on "Universal qualities in the Malayan language," which I read at the last session of the Society, in April, 1896 (see vol. xvii. p. 188); wherein, and here, I think I hav said enough to show that the English etymologist will never need to weep for more worlds to explore. At the worst he has always the desperate resort, to explore his own domain; which is, indeed, this world.

The Epistolary Literature of the Assyrians and Babylonians.
—By DR. CHRISTOPHER JOHNSTON, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

While the historical, grammatical, and poetical texts bequeathed to us by the ancient peoples of Babylonia and Assyria received from the first the careful attention of Oriental scholars, the numerous tablets containing letters and dispatches have until recent years attracted only a moderate degree of interest. This was but natural. The mass of the Assyro-Babylonian literature which has come down to us is of immense extent, and the number of Assyriologists has never been large, so that a considerable degree of selection was demanded by the nature of the subject. Close study of the grammatical and lexicographical texts was absolutely necessary in order to obtain a competent knowledge of the newly discovered language. The vivid light thrown by the historical documents upon a long lost period of the world's history amply explains the zealous study bestowed upon them, while their comparatively simple style and construction rendered them a most fitting subject for workers in a new field. The many beautiful hymns and psalms discovered in the library of that great patron of letters, King Sardanapallus, and in the ruins of the Babylonian temples; the great national epic celebrating the exploits of the hero Gilgamesh; the magical and liturgical texts; the intensely interesting cosmogonic legends, with the invaluable information all these supplied concerning the religion and religious myths of Western Asia, could not fail to excite deep interest in the minds of all scholars, especially when it is remembered that, at the outset, the study of Assyrian was pursued, not so much for itself, as on account of the light it was expected to shed upon the Old Testament narrative. Under these circumstances it was hardly to be expected that very great attention should be paid to a class of tablets, valuable indeed, but of minor importance compared with the texts previously mentioned, and moreover extremely difficult to interpret.

The first scholar to make use of the dispatch tablets was George Smith, who in the year 1871 published extracts from some ten of them, with transliteration and translation, in his History of Assurbanipal. Smith, while he often grasped the general sense of the text, was apt to be incorrect in matters of detail, and his translations are therefore faulty; but it must be borne in mind that he wrote over twenty years ago, when the field of Assyrian epistolary literature was as yet wholly unexplored. That he recognized the value of these texts is shown by his citations from them; but, having at his command abundance of material which readily yielded far more striking results, he bestowed but scant study upon them. Thus, in the section of his book devoted to the Elamite wars, he cites and translates lines 1-13 of the very important text K 13, but goes no further, although the remaining fifty-two lines would have yielded him most valuable information in regard to the subject he had in hand. During the remaining five years of his life, Smith's work was principally devoted to the exploration of the buried cities of Western Asia and to the publication of the results attained by him in this field; and, with the exception of two texts translated in his Assyrian Discoveries, this branch of cuneiform literature received no further attention from him.

If I am correctly informed, the German Government had requested the British Museum to furnish some translations of Assyrian letters for the Reichspost Museum of Berlin. The task was assigned to Mr. Theo. G. Pinches, who was thus obliged to devote some attention to these texts. On the 4th of December, 1877, Mr. Pinches read before the Society of Biblical Archaeology a paper entitled "Notes upon the Assyrian Report Tablets, with Translation." In this paper, which was published in the Transactions of the Society for the following year (vol. vi. pp. 209-243), the author, after a general introduction, gave a summary of the contents of four letters selected by him, followed by the cuneiform text with interlinear transliteration and translation, accompanied by brief philological notes. This was the first attempt to subject the letters to systematic study on the same lines as the other branches of Assyrian literature, and it is not surprising that this pioneer work was not, in every respect, successful. It gives an idea of the difficulties surrounding the subject, that even so experienced a cuneiformist as Mr. Pinches often failed to grasp the meaning of the texts he had selected for study. But the methods of the day were in a high degree empirical. Assyrian was studied through the medium of Hebrew, Arabic, and Aramaean; and a more or less happy conjecture did the rest. The present method of study, by the comparison of parallel passages and the sifting over of the whole cuneiform literature to discover the uses of each separate word, had hardly come into existence; indeed, it is to be regretted that, even to-day, a few scholars still adhere to the older and less laborious method. However, it cannot be expected that a science, which had its birth hardly fifty years ago, should in this brief time attain perfection. We should rather rejoice that so much has been accomplished than regret that so much remains to be done.

Stimulated, perhaps, by Mr. Pinches' example, one of the old pioneers of cuneiform research, the English discoverer of photography, Mr. H. Fox Talbot, next essayed to translate the very difficult text K 31. The results of his attempt appeared in the Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology for 1878, and in vol. xi. of the Records of the Past, published in the same year, under the title "Defense of a Magistrate falsely accused." The very title shows how completely Mr. Talbot failed to understand the text, which is an appeal for redress, made by a person who claims to have been deprived of his property and otherwise injured by personal enemies, taking advantage of certain political conditions.

Since the year 1878, Mr. Pinches has published translations of a few letters, principally in Records of the Past; but they must all be considered as unsuccessful attempts based on the old conjectural method of work. In justice to Mr. Pinches, however, it should be stated that, while not wholly successful in his efforts to explain these difficult texts, he has rendered most valuable services to Assyriologists in making the texts accessible. His great skill and accuracy in copying and editing cuneiform texts has been exhibited on many occasions, and he has made all students of Assyriology his debtors by his most excellent work in the preparation and revision of the second edition of the fourth volume of the Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia.

The sketch of Assyro-Babylonian Literature in Kaulen's Assyrien und Babylonien (4th ed., 1891, pp. 189 ff.) contains (second hand) translations of a few letters; and both Hommel (Geschichte Babyloniens und Assyriens, 1885-86) and Tiele (Babylonisch-Assyrische Geschichte, 1886) made free use in their respective works of such letter-texts as were of historical importance.

Father J. N. Strassmaier, whose merits as a copyist are well known, published copious extracts from the letters in his Alphabetisches Verzeichniss, which appeared in 1886, but made no attempt at translation. In fact, until the year 1887, very little had been done toward the special study of this very interesting branch of Assyrian literature, and only a small number of complete texts had been published.¹ In 1887-89, however, an American, Mr. Samuel Alden Smith, published, in the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, and in the second and third parts of his Keilschrifttexte Assurbanipals, sixty-nine texts copied from the best preserved letter-tablets in the British Museum, with transliteration, translation, and philological notes; Mr. Pinches, who assisted materially in editing the texts, and other cuneiformists, appended additional notes. Mr. Smith unfortunately lacked the necessary philological knowledge, and, while he added greatly to the available material for study, he did very little to elucidate the subject. His translations not only fail to reproduce the original, but are frequently so obscure as to be actually unintelligible, owing, perhaps, to his imperfect command of German.

Prof. Friedrich Delitzsch, the founder of the Leipzig school of Assyriology, who, as is evident from the numerous citations of these texts in his Assyrian Grammar and his Assyrian Dictionary, had already given much attention to the subject, next published, in the Beiträge zur Assyriologie (1889-91), a series of three papers on Assyrian letters, in which, unlike Smith, he gives the text in transliteration only. His commentary, however, is fuller, and he endeavors to ascertain something about the personality of the writer wherever possible. Prof. Delitzsch treated forty texts, thirty-one of which had been already translated by Smith, but in all these cases the necessity for a re-translation is obvious. Prof. Delitzsch, approaching the subject in a scientific manner, and possessing the advantages of a large experience and extensive lexicographical collections, has solved the problem, and laid down the lines upon which the study of the Assyrian epistolary literature must be carried on in the future. As in other branches of cuneiform research, he applies here the principles of common sense, even a moderate exercise of which might have saved S. A. Smith from many errors.

Perhaps the greatest difficulty in the way of a successful study of the Assyrian letters was the absence of sufficient available material upon which to work. While few, or comparatively few, texts were published, and while the great mass of those in the British Museum were not even catalogued according to their contents, the task was almost a hopeless one; but the difficulty has at last been removed. The catalogue of the Kouyunjik Collection prepared by Dr. Carl Bezold (who may be called the Chief Registrar of Assyriology), of which the first volume appeared in 1889, has rendered it possible to select these texts from the many thousands composing the collection; and an American scholar, Dr. Robert Francis Harper, of the University of Chicago, a former pupil of Delitzsch and Schrader, has been prompt to take advantage of the fact. Aided by Bezold's catalogue, Dr. Harper has within the last few years copied a large number of these texts; and a portion of the results of his labors has been given to the world in the two volumes of his Assyrian and Babylonian Letters of the K Collection. These two volumes, which appeared in 1892 and 1894 respectively, contain altogether two hundred and twenty-three carefully edited and excellently published letters. Many of these texts, it is true, had already been published; but their republication is necessary, owing to the plan of the author, which is to make his work a complete "Corpus Epistolarum" of the K Collection. As in the case of S. A. Smith, Mr. Pinches has again placed his great skill and experience at the disposal of the author, and has rendered valuable service in collating a large number of the texts and aiding in editing them.

For obvious reasons Dr. Harper has grouped together all the letters of each writer, and it is his purpose to publish first those texts which preserve the name of the scribe, and later those from which the name is missing. Nor does he propose to confine himself to the K collection, as the title of his book would indicate, but intends to publish, in the Zeitschrift für Assyriologie and in Hebraica, letters from the other collections of the British Museum, and subsequently to incorporate them in a later volume of his work. Fourteen letters of the R^m2. Collection have already appeared in volume eight of the Zeitschrift für Assyriologie.¹ When the texts have been published, Dr. Harper proposes to add transliterations, translations, and a glossary. (See the prefaces to Parts I. and II. of Dr. Harper's work.) It is to be hoped that this work, so excellently begun, may be carried on to successful completion.²

In speaking of the epistolary literature of the Assyrians reference has been had to the letters of the later period, that of the Sargonides; and, as for a long time no others were known to exist, the term has become in a manner fixed, and for the sake of convenience is retained here. Its application is now, however, no longer strictly accurate. In the winter of 1887-88 some natives found at Tel el-Amarna in Upper Egypt between three and four hundred cuneiform tablets, which proved to consist of letters and dispatches addressed to the Egyptian Court in the 15th century B. C. Of these tablets eighty-two were secured for the British Museum, and one hundred and sixty for that of Berlin; the Bulaq Museum has sixty, and the rest are in the hands of private individuals. Excellent editions of these texts have been published by the authorities of the Berlin and British Museums, and Dr. Carl Bezold has, under the somewhat misleading title of Oriental Diplomacy, published in transliteration the eighty-two texts of the latter Museum, with summaries of their contents, grammatical analysis, and a glossary. While this article is going through the press, the fifth volume of Schrader's Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek has been issued. It contains a transliteration and translation of the Amarna texts, with glossary, indexes, etc., by Dr. Hugo Winckler, of the University of Berlin. This volume has also been published in English.

Of the literature of the subject, which has already assumed formidable proportions, a very complete bibliography is to be found in the edition of the British Museum texts published in 1892. A brief sketch of the characteristics of these interesting documents is given below (pp. 132 ff.).

² Parts III. and IV. have just appeared, after the present article was in type. It has therefore been impossible to make any extensive use of the new material contained therein.

Under the title Assyrian letters is included a large number of documents differing greatly in contents and scope. Among them are the letters of private individuals; letters of kings to members of their families, and to various high officers of the empire; reports of governors of provinces, and of military and civil officers; proclamations; petitions; reports of priests on omens, terrestrial and celestial; astronomical reports; reports of physicians concerning patients under their care;—in short, while letters of an official character largely predominate, nearly every species of epistolary composition is represented among these interesting texts. A systematic classification of them is for the present out of the question, since Dr. Harper's book has only reached the second volume, while the information supplied by Bezold's catalogue is of the vaguest possible character and often misleading. To this is added the further difficulty, that many of those already published are as yet very obscure. In fact, no proper classification can be carried out until a much larger number of the letters has been published, and a complete concordance prepared of the names of persons and places occurring in them. The excellent plan adopted by Dr. Harper, of grouping the letters under the names of the writers, will do much to facilitate this work. When we consider the unbounded enthusiasm with which every fragment of an ancient Greek or Roman inscription is received, and remember that in these letters we possess hundreds of original contemporary documents whose authenticity is beyond all question, their value to all students of Assyro-Babylonian life and history is not easily over-estimated.

Thus, to select a few examples, the proclamation of Sardanapallus, published in IV R² 45, no. 1, is an urgent appeal to the Babylonians to hold aloof from the threatened revolt of his brother Šamaš-šum-ukin,—a revolt which, when it took place, shook the Assyrian empire to its foundation and led the way to its ultimate downfall.¹ The text K 13 (IV R² 45, no. 2) furnishes valuable details in regard to the events which resulted in the invasion of Elam and the sacking of Susa, described in that portion of the annals of Sardanapallus recording the eighth campaign of that monarch; while the dispatch K 10 (Pinches' Texts, p. 6), proceeding from the same writer, affords an insight into the distracted state of the unhappy land of Elam, which, weakened by internal factional contests, fell an easy prey to the Assyrian arms.

The letters of the old courtier Rammân-šum-uṣur afford a glimpse into the manners and customs of the Assyrian court in the days of the Sargonides, and two of them especially, K 183² and K 595 (Harper, no. 6), are models of courtly style. In the former he complains that, owing to the machinations of powerful enemies, his son had failed to obtain a position at court, to which, it would seem, his birth entitled him, and, with the utmost tact, appeals to the king to remedy the injustice done him; the latter letter, apparently in reply to a familiar and kindly communication from the king, contains two distinct plays upon words, by ringing the changes upon which the writer conveys a series of compliments to his royal master.

In the text K 629 (Harper, no. 65), the priest Nabû-šum-iddina outlines the program of a religious ceremony, accompanied by a procession, to be held in honor of the god Nabû at Calah, in which he proposes to take part, and concludes with a prayer for the welfare of "the prince, my lord," to whom the letter is addressed. Letters from priests, indeed, are very numerous, and usually contain answers to requests for information concerning omens, lucky or unlucky days, charms, and similar matters. It is clear, not only from the letters but also from the other branches of Assyrian literature, that it was the custom of the king to consult the will of the gods in all his undertakings, and the picture in the Book of Daniel of King Nebuchadnezzar calling in the aid of his magicians and soothsayers is by no means overdrawn.

Quite a number of the letters proceed from physicians. In one (S 1064), we find the physician Arad-Nanâ applying a bandage in a case of ophthalmia or of facial erysipelas; in K 519 he recommends plugging the anterior nares in a case of epistaxis;¹ and in K 576 he advises the king to anoint himself, to drink only pure water, and to wash his hands frequently in a bowl. From the letter K 81 we learn that when the Assyrian general Kudurru lay ill at Erech, the king sent him his own physician Iqîša-aplu, by whose efforts he was so fortunate as to be restored to health.²

In spite of the very complete system of laws evidenced by the contract tablets, we find petitions complaining of the subversion of justice to private ends; but too much stress should not be laid upon this. All such petitions are ex parte statements, and few men who lose a case at law, even at the present day, acquiesce entirely in the justice of the decision.

So many sculptures have been found representing Assyrian kings riding in chariots drawn by spirited steeds that it is interesting to find a number of dispatches reporting the arrival of horses for the use of the king, his household, or his officers; and not less interesting to learn that the most highly prized breeds of these animals were the Ethiopian and the Median, both famous among other nations of antiquity as well.³

These few examples will give some idea of the contents of the letters, and of what we may expect to learn from them when a sufficient amount of material has been made available. The study, however, is by no means an easy one. These texts, varying in length from six or seven to sixty or seventy lines, proceed from a great variety of writers of different stations in life, and come from every part of the great Assyrian Empire. In the case of many of them we are at a loss to understand the affairs to which they refer, since they were composed under circumstances of which we have no knowledge. Events well known both to the writer and to his correspondent are frequently alluded to in such a way as to give but a slight hint, or none at all, as to their real significance. And this is to be expected, for a letter of the present day might well be totally unintelligible to one unacquainted with the writer and the person to whom it is addressed.

Dialectic peculiarities are to be expected; but here great caution must be used, since no safe conclusions can be formed upon this head with the rather scanty materials at present available. Above all, it must be borne in mind that these letters are not composed in the classical language of the historical inscriptions and the poetical texts, but in the colloquial speech of Assyria and Babylonia at the time of the Sargonides, differing from the classical language in somewhat the same way as Cicero's letters from his orations. Much, of course, depends upon the subject matter and the personality of the writer. The soldier, the priest, the physician, the astrologer, has each his technical terms and his peculiar forms of expression. But even in the most elevated epistolary style the language differs considerably from that of the historical texts. Words and forms abound which are only to be met with in this branch of cuneiform literature, and the long and flowing periods of the classical texts are here replaced by terser forms of speech. The syntactical construction is less rigid, while the employment of shorter sentences, and the frequent use of the particles, especially of the enclitic ni, renders the style more vivid and lively. Individual differences of style occur as a matter of course; the styles of the courtier Rammân-šum uqur and of the soldier Bel-ibni distinctly reflect the habits and pursuits of the writers.

As stated above, the Tel el-Amarna letters are not here included under the head of Assyrian letters, a term until quite recently restricted by usage to the letters of the Sargonide period, but are treated as a special branch of cuneiform literature. They are, however, so interesting and throw so much light upon a very obscure historical period that, although not coming strictly within the scope of this paper, some brief account of them would seem to be called for.

Amenophis III., of the 18th dynasty (reigned 1413-1377 B. C.), married, as has long been known from the Egyptian monuments, a Mesopotamian princess named Tii or Thi, by whom he became the father of his successor Amenophis IV. (reigned 1376-1364 B. C.). The latter, who reigned only about twelve years, seceded from the national worship of Amen, and endeavored to substitute for it that of Aten, or the solar disk. His efforts were, however, frustrated by the vigorous opposition of the priesthood, and he retired to a place on the Nile, about a hundred and eighty miles above Memphis, where he built an entirely new temple, palace, and town. It was in the ruins of this palace, near the modern village of Tel el-Amarna, that these invaluable tablets were found in 1887-88. They consist of letters and dispatches addressed to Amenophis III., and to his son and successor Amenophis IV., by Asiatic monarchs,—among them Burnaburias, King of Babylon, and Ašur-uballiš, King of Assyria, both previously known from the cuneiform inscriptions,—and by Egyptian prefects and governors of a large number of towns in Syria and Phœnicia. All these are written in a variety of the cuneiform script intermediate between the old linear and the later cursive form, but bearing a closer affinity to the Assyrian than to the Babylonian style of writing. The language employed is, except in case of two letters, Assyrian, but, as in the letters of a later period, it differs considerably from that of the historical inscriptions. The dispatches from Syria and Phœnicia, moreover, exhibit a number of peculiarities due to the influence of Canaanite environment, and in some cases genuine Canaanite words are added as explanatory glosses to Assyrian phrases.¹ One of the letters is composed in the language of Mitani, and another in that of Arçapi, of which no specimens had previously been discovered.

The letters from the more distant Asiatic princes are uniformly friendly in tone, and refer to treaties with Egypt, to mutual alliances by marriage, to commercial relations, and to the interchange of gifts. With the close, apparently, of the reign of Amenophis III. begins a series of letters and dispatches from Syria and Phœnicia indicating the decadence of the Egyptian power in those countries. Revolt after revolt is reported, and the aid of more troops is constantly demanded. The cities are all falling away from the king; the friends of Egypt are few and weak, and surrounded by powerful enemies; unless promptly supported by strong reinforcements they can no longer hold out, and the whole country must soon be lost to the Egyptian monarch.

Most of these tablets are to be referred to the troubled reign of Amenophis IV., who, weakened by his unsuccessful contest with the priesthood of the old religion, was unable to keep in subjection his Syrian vassals, while the latter were prompt to take advantage of his weakness in order to achieve their independence. It is a most interesting fact that five of these letters are from Jerusalem, which thus appears as a city of importance even in the days before the Exodus. An excellent translation of the Jerusalem letters is given by Dr. H. Zimmern in the Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, vi. pp. 245-263.

The Tel el-Amarna letters have attracted so much attention, and so much has been written about them (see the excellent bibliography appended to the British Museum edition), that further discussion is unnecessary in a paper not specially devoted to the subject. The field, however, is by no means exhausted. While the general contents of these valuable and interesting documents is pretty well known, only a comparatively small number of them has as yet been translated in a satisfactory manner, and the recent discovery of a cuneiform tablet of the same period at Tel el-Hesi, the site of the ancient Lachish,¹ gives fair promise that at no distant day the treasure may receive material additions.

In the following section, twenty selected letters are presented in transliteration, with translations and explanatory introductions. Seven of them, viz. Nos. 1, 2 (ll. 1-13), 4, 5, 6, 14, and 16, have already been translated, as will be found noted in each case; but they are here newly treated, and the present translations are offered as substitutes for those which have previously appeared. The rest are here translated for the first time. In all cases the writer has endeavored to render the Assyrian texts into intelligible English, without, however, departing from the sense and spirit of the original.

The accompanying transliterations are an attempt to embody the views of the writer as to the grammatical reconstruction of the Assyrian text; such explanations as may seem necessary will be given in the philological notes in Part II., which will also contain syllabic transliterations and literal translations.

Part I. has been prepared with special reference to non-Assyriologists, and therefore all matter of an exclusively technical nature has been reserved for Part II.

Among the numerous Assyrian and Babylonian letters which have been preserved, none are more interesting than those of a certain Bel-ibni. Rich in historical allusions, they cast a most valuable side-light upon the actors and events of an important period, and furnish many suggestive details. Seven of these letters have already been published, and, in the preface to the second part of his Assyrian and Babylonian Letters of the K Collection, Prof. R. F. Harper promises to edit the whole series.

in the third part of that valuable work.¹ Three letters from King Sardanapallus to Bel-ibni have also been published with transliteration, translation, and commentary, and his name is mentioned in a number of other letters of the period.

Bel-ibni was a man of high rank, a general in the armies of Sardanapallus, and served with distinction during the revolt of Sumaš-šum-ukin and in the campaigns against Elam and the war-like Chaldeans of Southern Babylonia. As to his birth and family relations, we have little information. He had, however, a brother, Belšunu, and a nephew, his sister's son, Mušezib-Marduk. The nephew held a high military command under Bel-ibni; Belšunu, seized by Nabû-bel-šumâte at the time of his revolt, was thrown into prison, loaded with chains, and held in captivity for a considerable period—an injury which goes far to account for the implacable animosity exhibited by Bel-ibni towards the Chaldean prince. Bel-ibni himself, according to a proclamation of the King to the people of the Gulf District, held the rank of manzaz pāni, a dignity reserved for the most exalted nobility and the highest officers of state, the possessors of which, as the name implies, enjoyed the right of access to the royal presence and of a place near the King's person on all occasions of ceremony.

All the letters which passed between the King and Bel-ibni are marked, says Prof. Delitzsch (B. A., i. p. 234), by the most cordial good feeling. Those addressed by the monarch to his general may be called almost affectionate in tone, and in one instance, when it seemed necessary to administer a reproof for an apparent disregard of instructions, the sting is removed by a prompt forgiveness and an expression of the utmost confidence. A translation of this letter by the present writer will be found in Jour. Amer. Orient. Soc., xv. pp. 313, 314. The letters of Bel-ibni to his sovereign, while exhibiting all the respect due to the royal station and preserving all the forms of Oriental etiquette, are yet characterized by a certain soldier-like frankness and directness of speech; and stamp the writer as a man earnest and capable in the discharge of his duties, self-reliant and thoroughly practical in all emergencies, and conscious that he both enjoyed and deserved the confidence of his friend and master.

In the year 652 B. C. (Tiele, Babyl. Assy. Geschichte, p. 377), Kudurru, Governor of Erech, reports to the King that he has received a message from Sin-tabni-ugur, Governor of Ur, stating that he has been summoned by Samāš-šum-ukin, King of Babylon and brother of Sardanapallus, to join in his revolt against Assyria, and praying earnestly for reinforcements, which he (Kudurru) has forthwith despatched (K 5457). In this letter Bel-ibni is mentioned, but it is impossible to make out the context owing to the mutilation of the tablet. The text is published in Winckler's Sammlung von Keilschrifttexten, ii. p. 55.

In the year 650 B. C. (Tiele, op. cit., p. 381), Bel-ibni was appointed governor of the Mât Tāmti, the district lying along the Persian Gulf (K 812; S. A. Smith, Asurb., ii. p. 49), and in the same year writes to the King that he has forwarded to the Assyrian court Tammariṭu, the fugitive King of Elam, recently deposed by Indabigaš, together with his family and adherents who shared his flight (K 599; Smith, Asurb., p. 196).

In the letter K 5062 (Winckler, op. cit., ii. p. 69), which is unfortunately so mutilated as to yield no connected sense, he mentions Tammariṭu (obv. ll. 15, 17, 27, 30) and Nabû-bel-šumâte (obv. l. 31). The text K 1250 (Winckler, op. cit., ii. p. 59) is badly mutilated at the beginning and end, and the name of the writer is broken away; its matter and style, however, together with a number of peculiar forms of expression, stamp it unmistakably as the composition of Bel-ibni. A comparison of this text with K 13 leaves no doubt upon the subject.¹ "Before the troops of the lord of kings, my lord," he writes, "terror has entered (into Elam) like a ravaging disease" (ll. 8-10). "When the troops of the lord of kings, my lord, enter Dûr-ili . . . they shall seize that vile wretch, accursed of the gods, Nabû-bel-šumâte, and the villains who are with him, give them to the lord of kings, my lord, release all the Assyrians he holds captive, and send him to the lord of kings, my lord. When that vile wretch, accursed of the gods, Nabû-bel-šumâte, revolted some four years ago, he bound with fetters, hand (literally 'side') and foot, Belšunu, my eldest brother, a servant of the lord of kings, my lord, (and) cast him into prison" (ll. 11-25).

A Belšunu, Governor of Khindana, was eponym about the year 648 B. C. (Tiele, p. 389), but whether he was the brother of Bel-ibni is uncertain. If the revolt of Nabû-bel-šumâte be correctly placed in 651 B. C. (Tiele, p. 381), this letter must have been written in the year 647.

Like the preceding text, K 1374 (Winckler's Sammlung von Keilschrifttexten, ii. pp. 20, 21) is badly mutilated, and the name of the writer is broken off. But a comparison of what remains of the introduction with other letters of Bel-ibni clearly shows that this text proceeds from the same writer. We find also (obv. ll. 1, 8; rev. ll. 15, 18, 20, 21, 25) the king referred to as "lord of kings, my lord," an expression peculiar to the style of Bel-ibni. He states (obv. ll. 17, 18) that all Elam has revolted against King Ummakhaldas (Ummanaldas);² mentions, among other persons, Umkhulumā (rev. l. 3) and Nabû-bel-šumâte (rev. l. 6); and refers to the messengers of Šamaš-šum-ukīn, the rebellious brother of Sardanapallus (rev. l. 7). Towards the close of the letter (rev. ll. 17 ff.) he complains that though he has several times applied for horses, which are very much needed, he has been unable to obtain them.

² This may refer to the rebellion of Umbakhadû'a mentioned Asurb., v. 16-17.

The following letter from Bel-ibni to the king (K 524) is published, with transliteration, translation, and commentary, in S. A. Smith's Keilschrifttexte Assurbanipals, ii. pp. 54-58, to which are appended additional notes and corrections by Pinches (pp. 78-78), and by Strassmaier (pp. 87-88). Those points in which the translation offered below differs from that of Smith and his learned collaborators will be noticed in the philological notes.

The account given of the dealings of Nadān with Nabû-bel-šumâte, and the recommendation of summary punishment in case of any attempt to continue the intercourse, would seem to indicate that the revolt of the Chaldean prince had already been effected; while the flight from Elam of Šumâ, the nephew of Tammaritu, points to the brief reign of Indabigaš. It is probable that Šumâ, unable, perhaps on account of the illness referred to in the letter, to accompany his uncle when the latter, deposed by Indabigaš, escaped to Babylonia, made his way to the border as best he could, and was received by Bel-ibni as related in the letter, which, if this conjecture be correct, should be referred to the year 650 B. C. The text may be translated as follows:

TRANSLATION.

To the lord of kings, my lord, thy servant Bel-ibni! May Ašur, Šamaš, and Marduk decree length of days, health of mind and body, for the lord of kings, my lord!

Šumâ, the son of Šum-iddina, son of Gakhal—son of Tammaritu's sister—fleeing from Elam, reached the (country of the) Dakkhâ. I took him under my protection and transferred him from the Dakkhâ (hither). He is ill. As soon as he completely recovers his health, I shall send him to the king, my lord.

A messenger has come to him (with the news) that Nadān and the Pukudeans of Til. . .¹ had a meeting with Nabû-bel-šumâte at the city of Targibâti, and they took a mutual oath to this effect: "According to agreement we shall send you whatever news we may hear." To bind the bargain(?) they purchased from him fifty head of cattle, and also said to him: "Our sheep shall come and graze in the pasture(?), among the Ubanateans, in order that you may have confidence in us." Now (I should advise that) a messenger of my lord the king come, and give Nadān plainly to understand as follows: If thou sendest anything to Elam for sale, or if a single sheep gets over to the Elamite pasture (?), I will not let thee live." The king my lord may thoroughly rely upon my report.

This letter is published in Assyrian transcription in the first edition of The Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia, vol. iv (pl. 52, no. 2), and in the original cursive Babylonian character in the second edition of that work (pl. 45, no. 2). Lines 1-13 are published with transliteration and translation in George Smith's History of Assurbanipal, pp. 197 ff.

The situation would seem to have been as follows: Tammaritu, king of Elam, having been dethroned in the year 650 B. C. by Indabigaš, who made himself king in his stead, made his escape to the coast of the Persian Gulf, accompanied by his family and adherents, among whom were included many high officers of state. Embarking there, he reached the Babylonian shore, whence the whole party was forwarded to the Assyrian court by Bel-ibnī, who had been recently appointed governor of the Gulf District. (See above, p. 137.) On being admitted to an audience with the Assyrian monarch, Tammaritu humiliated himself before him, and besought his aid in recovering his lost kingdom. (Tiele, pp. 380, 381.) In the meantime Nabū-bel-šumāte, grandson of the Chaldean king of Babylon, Merodach-baladan, had thrown off the authority of Assyria and withdrawn to Elam, taking with him as captives certain Assyrians who had been detailed, ostensibly to aid in the defense of his dominions, but in reality, doubtless, to protect Assyrian interests there. Sardanapallus demanded the release of the prisoners and the surrender of Nabû-bel-šumâte, the perpetrator of the outrage, threatening, in case of a refusal to comply with his demand, to invade Elam, depose Indabigaš, and place Tammaritu on the throne. Before this message reached its destination, however, the Elamite monarch had been deposed by a revolution, and Ummanaldaš made king in his stead (Ašurb., iv. 114, 115; Cyl. B. vii. 71-87; Cyl. C. vii. 88-115; K. B., ii. pp. 266 ff.). The latter would seem, according to our report (ll. 23-31), to have been inclined to accept the terms of the king of Assyria, but to have lacked the power. Elam was accordingly invaded, and Ummanaldaš, unable to make effective resistance, abandoned his capital, Madaktu, and took refuge in the mountains, leaving the way clear for his rival Tammaritu, who was, with little or no resistance, established on the throne as a vassal of Assyria (Ašurb., iv. 110-v. 22). But the new king, proving ungrateful and rebellious, was soon deposed; Elam was again invaded; and the troops of Sardanapallus, after ravaging the country, returned home laden with spoil (Ašurb., v. 23-62). Ummanaldaš now quietly resumed his kingdom, but was not long allowed to remain undisturbed. Sardanapallus again made preparation for an invasion, and Ummanaldaš, on the approach of the invading forces, once more left Madaktu, and endeavored to make head against his enemies in the regions beyond the river Id'id'e (Ašurb., v. 66-75). It is to this juncture of affairs that the report refers. It may be translated as follows:

TRANSLATION.

To the lord of kings, my lord, thy servant Bel-ibnî! May Ašur, Šamaš, and Marduk grant health of mind and body, long life, and a lengthy reign to the lord of kings, my lord!

The news from Elam is as follows: Ummakhaldaš, the former king, who fled, but returned again and seated himself upon the throne, has become alarmed and left the city of Madaktu. His mother, his wife, his sons, and all his family having removed, he crossed the river Ulæus, and went southward (?) to Talakh. The Nāgir Ummansimaš, Undadu the Zilliru, and all his partisans have gone in the direction of Šukharisungur, now saying: "We will dwell in the Khukhan country," and now again "in Kha'ādālu."¹

All these parts are in terror; for the troops of the lord of kings, my lord, have brought panic into Elam, and spread abroad calamity like a plague. When need came upon their land, the whole country fell away from their side. All the Dakkhadeans and the Sallukeans are in a state of revolt, saying: "Why did ye slay Umkhulumâ?" When Ummakhaldāš entered Madaktu, calling together all his partisans, he upbraided them as follows: "Did I not say to you before I fled that I wished to seize Nabû-bel-šumâte and give him up to the king of Assyria, in order that he might not send his troops against us? You heard me, and can bear witness to my words."

Now, if it please the lord of kings, my lord, let me (privately) convey the royal signet to Ummakhaldāš, with reference to the capture of Nabû-bel-šumâte. I shall send it to Ummakhaldāš as a guarantee (?). If my lord the king should think, They are I shall send my message to them for a guarantee (?), (I would suggest that) when the royal messenger reaches them accompanied by an escort of troops, that accursed scoundrel Nabû-bel-šumâte will hear of it, and, paying a ransom to the nobles, will buy himself off. If the gods of the lord of kings, my lord, would only bestir themselves, they would catch him with his bow unstrung, and send him to the lord of kings, my lord.

They collect all the tax corn (?) in Elam, and, putting it in charge of the šarnuppu,¹ they live on it. As long as Umkhulumâ was alive, Nabû-bel-šumâte, on receiving his share, would lavish it upon his partisans. This tax corn (?), in charge of the šarnuppu, they levy from Talakh as far as Radê, and throughout the country of Salluk. Now, Nabû-bel-šumâte, and Niskhur-bel, his major-domo, whenever they catch a šarnuppu, seize him, saying: "Whenever you applied to Umkhulumâ for our provisions, he used to give them to you. You have slain the people of our house with famine. You shall straightway restore to us our stolen provisions, at the rate of ten bar for one ga." (?) They withhold it from Ummakhaldāš, and, though he has applied (?) for it repeatedly, he cannot get it from them. Whenever I hear anything which the lord of kings, my lord, would wish to hear,

The fate of Nabū-bel-šumāte is known to us from the historical inscriptions. Shortly after the events narrated above, Elam was overrun by the Assyrian troops, its ancient capital Susa was captured and sacked, and, driven at length to despair, the gallant Chaldean and his armor-bearer slew each other to avoid falling alive into the hands of the implacable Assyrian monarch. Ummanaldaš, who had taken refuge in the mountains, sent the body of the rebel to Sardanapallus, who satisfied his vengeance by heaping insults upon the corpse of his life-long enemy (Ašurb., vii. 16-50). Thus ended the line of Merodach-baladan, which for three generations had offered a stubborn resistance to the might of the Assyrian empire.

Bel-ibni's nephew Mušēzib-Marduk seems to have been regarded with special favor by King Sardanapallus, and, though nowhere qualified as manzaz pāni, had, as we are informed in a letter from the king to his general, always been honored with ready admission to the monarch's presence (B. A., i. p. 236, ll. 7, 8). Kudurru, the loyal governor of Erech, thus refers to him in a letter to the king: "Mušēzib-Marduk, sister's son of Bel-ibni, who has several times presented himself before my lord the king on errands of Bel-ibni, has been entrusted with (this affair) by Bel-ibni. The officers in charge of the gates inform him that these people are not well disposed towards my lord's house, and that it will not be well to let them come over here. They will give information to Elam in regard to the country of my lord the king; and in case a famine should occur in Elam, will supply provisions there" (K 1066, Winckler's Sammlung von Keilschrifttexten, ii. p. 38, ll. 20-30). Unfortunately, the name of the people about whom Mušēzib-Marduk thus reports is broken away, but they must have been a tribe living on Elamite territory near the Assyrian border.

The following letter, K 10, is published in Pinches' Texts in the Babylonian Wedge-Writing, p. 6, and contains a report from Bel-ibni to the king concerning a successful raid into Elam under command of Mušēzib-Marduk.¹ Lines 15-25 of the reverse, conveying the latest news received from Elam, are published with transliteration and translation in George Smith's History of Assurbanipal, p. 248. Smith (p. 254) was inclined to identify Ummanigaš son of Amedirra with Ummanigaš son of Umbadara, whose statue was conveyed to Assyria by Sardanapallus at the time of the sacking of Susa (Ašurb., vi. 52); but this is hardly possible. The royal images removed from Susa would seem rather to have been those of the more ancient kings of Elam, and it is much more likely that Ummanigaš son of Umbadara was the monarch who, according to the Babylonian Chronicle (i. 9), ascended the throne in the year 742 B. C.

Tiele's conjecture (Babyl.-Assyr. Geschichte, p. 399, n. 1) is much more probable. After the overthrow of Elam and the sacking of Susa, Ummanaldaš continued for some time to rule over his shattered kingdom, until finally, overthrown by a revolution, he was captured by the successful rebels, sent to Assyria, and handed over to Sardanapallus, who treated him in a most humiliating manner. Along with other captive princes, he was harnessed to a car, and forced to draw it through the streets of Nineveh in the triumphal procession of his conqueror (Ašurb., x. 6 ff.). This revolution, so disastrous for the unfortunate Ummannaldaš, Tiele is inclined to identify with the revolt of Ummanigaš son of Amedirra, mentioned in the present text. It is entirely possible, however, that some other rebellion, not mentioned in the historical inscriptions, is here recorded. The text may be translated as follows:

TRANSLATION.

To the lord of kings, my lord, thy servant Bel-ibni!

May Ašur, Šamaš, and Marduk bestow health of mind, health of body, length of days, long years of reign, upon the lord of kings, the king of the world, my lord!

When I left the Gulf District, I sent five hundred soldiers, servants of my lord the king, to the city of Sabdānu, with these orders: "Establish a post (?) in Sabdānu, and make raids into Elam; slay and take prisoners!" When they reached the city of Irgidu, a city lying two leagues this side of Susa, they slew Ammaladin,¹ Prince of Iašī'an,² his two brothers, three of his uncles, two of his nephews, Dalān son of Adiadī'a, and two hundred free-born citizens—they had a long journey before them—and made one hundred and fifty prisoners. The authorities of Lakhiru and the people of Nugū', when they saw that my troops had got to their rear, becoming alarmed, sent a message, and entered into terms with Mušēzib-Marduk, my sister's son, a servant of my lord the king, whom I had placed in command of the post (?), saying: "We will become subjects of the king of Assyria." So, assembling all their force, they marched with Mušēzib-Marduk into Elam³ They bring (?) the following report from Elam. Ummanigaš son of Amedirra has revolted against Ummakhaldaš. From the river Khudkhud as far as the city of Kha'ādānu the people have sided with him. Ummakhaldaš has assembled his forces, and now they are encamped opposite each other on the banks of the river. Iqīša-aplu, whom I have sent to the palace, is well informed about them. Let him be questioned at the palace.

² For the name of this district, cf. Delitzsch, Kossäer, p. 47, n. 1. In the Prism-inscription of Sennacherib (col. v. l. 32), the region is called Iaš'an, Assyrian s representing foreign š.

Urtaku, King of Elam, who ascended the throne in the year 675 B. C., maintained friendly relations with Assyria during the lifetime of Esarhaddon; and the latter's son and successor, Sardapallus, endeavored to preserve this state of affairs. When a famine broke out in Elam, the Assyrian monarch sent grain for the relief of the distressed people, protected those Elamites who had taken refuge on Assyrian territory, and restored them to their country when the long drought was over and the land was once more productive (K. B., ii. p. 244). But Chaldean influence, ever hostile to Assyria, had become powerful at the court of Susa.

Urtaku allowed himself to be swayed by it, and, apparently without warning, marched against Babylon. Sardanapallus, though taken by surprise, lost no time in marching to the relief of the threatened city, signally defeated Urtaku, and compelled him to retire to Elam, where he soon after died. Among the Chaldeans who took part in this affair was Bel-iqīša, prince of Gambūlu, a marshy district of southeastern Babylonia about the mouth of the river Uknū, the modern Karoon,¹ and bordering upon Elam. Bel-iqīša, who was an Assyrian subject, cast off his allegiance, and, crossing over into Elam, joined Urtaku and took part in his ill-fated expedition. In the following year he was accidentally killed (K. B., ii. p. 244, ll. 56-58). His son and successor, Dunānu, bitterly hostile to Assyria, allied himself with Teumman, the successor of Urtaku, and on the defeat and death of his Elamite ally, his land was ravaged, its inhabitants put to the sword, and he himself with all his family carried captive to Assyria. Here he was forced to take part in the conqueror's triumphal entry into Nineveh, with the head of the slain Teumman hanging to his neck, and was finally put to death with frightful tortures (Ašurb., iv. 50 ff.; K. B., ii. pp. 254-256).

Nabū-ušabši, the writer of the two letters translated below, was an Assyrian official of Erech in Southern Babylonia. He seems to have suffered severely from the revolt of Bel-iqīša, and his advice in regard to the reduction of Gambūlu was doubtless in full accord with his personal feelings, which, indeed, he is at no pains to conceal. His letter which is published in The Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia, vol. iv., pl. 47, no. 2 (2d ed.), may be translated as follows:²

The following letter, also from Nabū-ušabši, is published in The Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia, vol. iv., pl. 46, no. 3 (2d ed.), and is translated by Pinches in Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, vi. pp. 239 ff. It contains an account of the practices of a certain Pir'i-Bel and his father Bel-eṭēr, who seem to have been Chaldean conspirators, engaged in fomenting strife between Elam and Assyria. A Bel-eṭēr, son of Nabū-šum-erēš, was carried captive to Nineveh with Dunānu, prince of Gambūlu, and he and his brother Nabū-nā'id were there forced to desecrate the bones of their father, who had been largely instrumental in inducing Urtaku to commence hostilities against Babylonia (K. B., ii. p. 258, ll. 84-91). If this was the Bel-eṭēr mentioned by Nabū-ušabši, the source of his enmity to Assyria may be readily understood, and, in this case, the letter must be referred to a later date than the preceding one (K 528).

On the other hand, it is quite possible that the similarity of names is merely a coincidence, and the events here narrated may have preceded the revolt of Bel-iqīša and the invasion of Urtaku. Kudurru, who is mentioned below, was doubtless the governor of Erech referred to above in connection with Bel-ibni. The letter may be rendered as follows :

Another letter from Nabū-ušabši to the king (K 514) is published, with transliteration, translation, commentary, and additional notes, by Pinches, in S. A. Smith's Keilschrifttexte Asurbanipals, iii. pp. 59-62, 105, 106; compare also Bezold's Out. of the K Collection, p. 120. The mutilation of lines 14-17 somewhat obscures the sense; but the latter refers chiefly to horses—some of which appear to have been presented to the goddess Ištar of Erech by the King of Elam—purchased for the king of Assyria by Nabū-ušabši, who promises to forward vouchers for the expense incurred.

K 824 is published with transliteration, translation, and commentary in S. A. Smith's Keilschrifttexte Asurbanipals, ii. pp. 63-67. Sin-tabni-uṣur ("Sin protect my offspring"), to whom it is addressed, was the son of Ningal-iddina ("Ningal has given"), and was governor of Ur, in Southern Babylonia, during the rebellion of Šamaš-šum-ukīn, king of Babylon and brother of Sardana-pallus. Kudurru, governor of Erech, writes to King Sardana-pallus that he has received a message from Sin-tabni-uṣur to the effect that an emissary of Šamaš-šum-ukīn, engaged in disseminating revolution through the country, has approached him with the view of engaging him in the treasonable design; that a portion of the district under his authority has already revolted; and that unless reinforcements be promptly sent he has the gravest fears for the result. Kudurru, in answer to this urgent appeal, has sent a force to his assistance (K 5457; Winckler, Sammlung von Keilschrifttexten, ii. p. 55, ll. 6 ff.). According to Geo. Smith (Hist. of Assurbanipal, p. 201), followed by Tiele (Bab.-Assyr. Gesch., pp. 377, 381), Sin-tabni-uṣur, unable to hold out until the arrival of these reinforcements, was constrained against his will to join the rebels.

* The text of line 18, and of the opening words of line 19, is very uncertain. See Part II.

The evidence that he did so, however, is by no means conclusive. His name is mentioned, it is true, in connection with that of Šamaš-šum-ukīn in two extracts from so-called omen-tablets published in Geo. Smith's work (pp. 184, 185); but the context is in both instances obscure, owing to mutilation of the text, and his participation in the rebellion, of which there is no other evidence, is merely an inference derived from the juxtaposition of the two names. Both these tablets would seem, however, to belong to the class of texts so ably illustrated in Knudtzon's Gebete an den Sonnengott, containing requests for information addressed to the oracles of the gods. It was by no means unusual to consult the oracle in this way with reference to an official, especially when recently appointed, or when about to be entrusted with some important commission; and several instances are given in Knudtzon's work (cf. e. g. nos. 67, 112, 114, 115). Now the first of the above mentioned tablets (K 4696), dated in the month of Ab, 651 B. C., contains the words, "Sin-tabni-uṣur, son of Ningal-iddina, who has been appointed governor of Ur" (literally, "over Ur"), which would seem to indicate that his appointment was recent; while in the second (K 28), dated in the preceding month of Tammuz, his name occurs without mention of Ur. It seems likely, therefore, that he was appointed governor of Ur in the month of Ab, 651, and that both tablets contain inquiries, addressed to the oracle, with reference to his probable conduct towards Šamaš-šum-ukīn, who was at that time in open rebellion. Unfortunately, both texts are badly mutilated, and only portions of them are published; but, in the absence of other evidence, the participation of Sin-tabni-uṣur in the great revolt can hardly be regarded as an established fact.

The letter here translated (K 824) was probably written some time before these events. Ummanigaš, mentioned in it as one of the calumniators of Sin-tabni-uṣur, was one of the three sons of Urtaku who took refuge at the Assyrian court when their father was dethroned and murdered by his brother Teumman. With the aid of Assyrian troops furnished by Sardanapallus, he defeated Teumman, who was slain in the battle, and Ummanigaš thus became king of Elam; but he was subsequently so ungrateful as to ally himself with Šamaš-šum-ukīn. In 651 or 650 B. C., he was, in his turn, deposed and slain by his brother Tammariṭu, who after a brief reign was, in the year 650 B. C., deposed by Indabigaš, and with difficulty made his escape to Babylonia, whence, as already narrated, he was sent on to Assyria by Bel-ibni, governor of the Gulf District. It was probably while residing at the Assyrian court, or at least prior to his alliance with the rebellious brother of Sardanapallus, that he endeavored to cast suspicion on the loyalty of Sin-tabnî-uçur. His accusations were not listened to by the king, who expresses the highest regard for, and the utmost confidence in, the integrity of his servant. The text may be translated as follows :

TRANSLATION.

Message of the King to Sin-tabnî-uçur. It is well with me ; may thy heart be of good cheer !

With reference to thy message about Sin-šarra-uçur, how could he speak evil words of thee, and I listen to them ? Since Šamaš perverted his understanding,¹ and Ummanigaš slandered thee before me, they have sought thy death, but Ašur my god withholds me (from that), and not willingly could I have put to death my servant and the support of my father's house. No !—for thou wouldst (be willing to) perish along with thy lord's house—(never) could I consent to that. He and Ummanigaš have plotted thy destruction, but because I know thy loyalty I have conferred even greater favor (than before) upon thee ; is it not so ? These two years thou hast not brought foe and need upon thy lord's house.² What could they say against a servant who loves his lord's house, that I could believe ? And with regard to the service which thou and thy brother Assyrians have rendered, about which thou sendest (word), all that (?) ye have done, the guard for me which ye have kept³ and this which is most honorable in my sight, and a favor which I shall requite to thee till (the times of our) children's children.

This letter, published in Harper's Letters of the K Collection, No. 138, carries us back to an earlier period than those treated above. The writer, Ša-Ašur-dubbu, was governor of the important city and district of Tuškan, on the easterly course of the northwestern bend of the Tigris, which had been a possession of Assyria since at least 880 B. C., and in all probability much earlier (Tiele, Bab.-Assyr. Gesch., pp. 180, 181). In 707 B. C., the sixteenth year of the reign of Sargon, the conqueror of Samaria, Ša-Ašur-dubbu gave his name to the year as Eponym, a fact which marks him as a magnate of the highest order (K. B., i. pp. 207, 214). In another letter (K 1067; Harper, No. 139), which is unfortunately so mutilated that the context cannot be made out with certainty, he mentions the city of Penzā, the king of the Armenian district Urartu, and a certain Khutešub. The latter, for whose name the reading Bagtišub is with great probability suggested by the Rev. C. H. W. Johns (PSBA., xvii. p. 234), appears in Harper's work (No. 215 = K 1037) as the author of a report, also badly mutilated, with reference to the neighboring countries of Urartu, Man, and Zikirtu, against which king Sargon (reigned 722-705 B. C.) waged successful wars in 715-714 B. C.

In the letter here translated (K 469), Ša-Ašur-dubbu gives, with military terseness, an account of a treacherous attack made upon a small party of his soldiers by a certain native of Šupria, a district which apparently lay near Tuškan, in the corner formed by the northwestern Tigris, where it turns its course eastward (cf. Knudtzon's Gebete an den Sonnengott, ii. p. 151).

The city of Dūr-Šarrukīn, or "Sargonsburg," mentioned in line 20 of the reverse, and for which the timber mentioned in line 17 was probably required, was founded, after a long cherished plan, by the great king whose name it commemorates, and completed in the latter years of his reign. On the 22^d of Tishri (September), 707, in the eponymy of Ša-Ašur-dubbu, the images of the gods were carried through its streets in solemn procession, and established in their temples, and in April of the following year the king formally took up his residence in his new capital. One year later (705), he fell by the hand of an assassin (Tiele, Bab.-Assyr. Gesch., p. 248). The site of Dûr-Šarrukîn, occupied by the modern village of Khorsabad, was explored in the years 1843-1844 by the French consul at Mosul, Émile Botta, who discovered the palace of Sargon, with a wealth of sculptures and inscriptions which were conveyed to Paris, and now form part of the Louvre collection. The letter of Ša-Ašur-dubbu may be rendered as follows :

TRANSLATION.

To the king, my lord, thy servant Ša-Ašur-dubbu ! A hearty greeting to the king, my lord ! Greeting to the fortresses, to the country of the king my lord !

I sent two of my officers, accompanied by six men and provided with a warrant, after some deserters who were in the city of Penzâ. Two chiefs of battalion went along with them. The soldiers took down rations, of which they partook (en route). The brother of the Šuprian, having shared their meal with them, they set out and travelled along together. The Šuprian had laid an ambush beforehand, (but) the two officers, with the six soldiers, got out (of it, and) rescued both the chiefs of battalion. I sent word to them, "Establish (there) a military post." I shall make an investigation, (and) if they are in my country I shall lay hands on the rascals. I went and brought up troops into the fortress. Let the king, my lord, send orders that the Taziru and the Itû of my lord the king, who have appointed their deputies here, may come (themselves) and stand guard with me, until they get this timber away. The king, my lord, shall decide. My men are doing duty in Dûr-Šarrukîn, (but) the cavalry are here with me.

The worship of the god Nabû seems to have been introduced into Assyria from Babylonia,—where he was from early times the special divinity of the important city of Borsippa near Babylon,—during the reign of Rammân-nirârî III. (812–783 B. C.), before which time the god would seem to have played no prominent part in the Assyrian pantheon. The annotated Eponym Canon records that in the year 787 the god Nabû made solemn entry into his "new temple" (K. B., i. p. 210), and this temple, situated in the city of Calah, where its ruins have been explored, bore, like its famous Babylonian prototype, the name of Ezida, "the true house." Upon two statues of Nabû found by W. K. Loftus in the temple at Calah, is an inscription (identical in both cases) stating that these statues were prepared by Bel-tarḡi-ilu-ma, governor of Calah and the adjoining district, as a votive offering "for the life of Rammân-nirârî, king of Assyria, his lord, and Sammu-râmat, the lady of the palace, his lady," as also for his own welfare and that of his family (K. B., i. p. 192).

Sammu-râmat, whose name recalls that of the mythical Semiramis,¹ was either the wife or mother of the king; and Tiele argues with great plausibility that this lady was a Babylonian princess, and that the introduction of the cult of Nabû into Assyria was owing to her influence (Tiele, Bab-Assyr. Gesch., pp. 207, 212). Once established, the worship of the god took firm root, and continued to flourish down to the last days of the empire.

Nabû-šum-iddina ("Nabû has given a name"), who, in the letter here presented describing a religious ceremony and solemn procession in honor of the god, styles himself the prefect of the temple of Nabû, appears to have lived in the reign of Esarhad-don; and the prince to whom the letter is addressed was probably Sardanapallus, and was evidently the heir to the throne, since a wish is expressed for the long duration of his future reign. A letter to the king from the same writer, or from a person of the same name (K 1017; Harper, No. 66), is too badly mutilated to yield any connected sense, but mentions (rev. ll. 1, 2) the crown prince (mār šarri rabū ša bit-ridāte), and the name of Sardanapallus, of which traces are preserved, is evidently to be restored before the title.

¹ Harper's text reads here u-ka-ip-ni (i. e. uqa'ip, II. 1. of qāpu, st. 77), but the enclitic ni cannot be joined to the verb without a union vowel (cf. Del., Assyr. Gram., § 79, β), and in any case we should expect the modus relativus after the preceding ša. The insertion of u improves both the sense and the construction. For itū as an official title, see Delitzsch, Handw., p. 157a, and PSBA., May 1889, pl. iv. col. i. 18; col. ii. 11.

Fourteen letters (Nos. 60-73) are published in Harper's work under the name of Nabû-šum-iddina. Of Nos. 72 (K 1272) and 73 (K 5509) merely the opening words remain; and the context of Nos. 67 (K 1050) and 70 (K 1070) is rendered unintelligible by the mutilation of the tablet. No. 66 has just been referred to, and all the rest are reports of the arrival of horses.¹ Whether the priest of Nabû and the writer about horses were identical is open to doubt. The formula of greeting is certainly the same in the letters of both persons, but it is not a very characteristic one. The invocation to Nabû and Marduk is common to many writers; precisely the same formula is found, for example, in the letter of Nabû-nāgir ("Nabû protects") to the king (Harper, No. 178=K 482).

The ceremonies attending the consecration of the couch of a god, referred to in the letter before us, are minutely described in a liturgical text (K 164; Beitr. zur Assyrl., ii. p. 635). After the appropriate offerings are presented, the officiating priestess purifies the feet of the divine image with a sprig of reed and a vessel of oil, approaches (?) the bed three times, kisses the feet of the image, and retires and sits down. She then burns cedar wood dipped in wine, places before the image the heart of a sheep wrapped in a cloth, and offers libations. Aromatic woods are consecrated and burnt, further libations and offerings are made, tables are spread for various divinities, and the ceremony concludes with a prayer for the king. This recalls Herodotus' description (i. 181) of the temple of Bel-Merodach at Babylon, where it is stated that the chamber containing the couch of the god, beside which stood a golden table, was at night occupied only by a woman supposed to be chosen by the god himself from all the women of the country. It would appear from the text before us that stables were attached to the temples for the accommodation of horses used on ceremonial occasions, when a specially appointed charioteer officiated. The jar-bearers mentioned probably carried holy water for lustral purposes and wine for libations.

The letter of Nabû-šum-iddina (K 629=Harper, No. 65) may be thus translated :

To the prince, my lord, thy servant Nabû-šum-iddina!

A hearty, hearty greeting to the prince, my lord! May Nabû and Marduk bless the prince, my lord!

On the third day of the month of Iyyar the city of Calah will consecrate the couch of Nabû, (and) the god will enter the bed-chamber. On the fourth (will take place) the return of Nabû. The prince my lord shall decide. I am the prefect of the house of Nabû thy god, (so) I (of course) shall go.

At Calah the god will come forth from the palace enclosure (?), (and) from the palace enclosure (?) will go to the grove. A sacrifice will be offered. The charioteer of the gods, coming from the stable of the gods, will take the god forth, bring him back, and convey him within. This is the route of the procession.

Of the jar-bearers, whoever has a sacrifice (to offer) will offer it. Whoever offers up one *qa*¹ of his food, may enter the house of Nabû. May they² perfectly execute the ordinances of the gods, to the life and health of the prince, my lord. What (commands) has the prince, my lord, to send me? May Bel and Nabû, who granted help in the month of Shebat, guard the life of the prince, my lord. May they make thy sovereignty extend to the end of time.

The general tone of this letter, and the reference to the gods Bel and Nabû contained in it, would seem to favor the identification of the writer with the priest of Nabû who in the text last treated invokes the same deities in behalf of the prince. The title of the official to whom it is addressed is mutilated, and is here restored in accordance with the traces given in Harper's copy of the text, which is published in his Letters of the K Collection (No. 62). It is a courteous expression of the good wishes of the writer in connection, apparently, with some matter the nature of which is not stated, but was of course well known to the recipient.

Išdī-Nabû ("Nabû is my foundation"), an Assyrian official who probably flourished in the reign of Esarhaddon (681-668 B. C.), is the writer of four letters published in Harper's collection (Nos. 186-189). In one of them (K 1048 ; Harper, No. 189), of which there remains only the formula of greeting and the name of one Ašur-šezibāni ("Ašur deliver me"), a governor, about whom some communication apparently followed, he styles himself, "the secretary of the new house." Another (K 113 ; Harper, No. 186)¹ contains a salutation "to the guards of the king, my lord," and refers chiefly to the endeavor of a certain Nādin-šum-ilu ("the god gives a name") to recruit for the same corps fifty men, formerly under the command of his father, who met his death "in the land of the enemy." The letter, written at Nineveh, is addressed to the king, who would seem to have been at the time in the neighborhood of Sippara. The second letter (K 589; Harper, No. 187), addressed to the prince (literally "the son of the king"), who may have been Sardanapallus, contains a courtly greeting, and conveys the assurance of the good will of the god Nabû, whose oracle he had doubtless consulted. It may be thus rendered :

The importance attributed to omens, and the great attention paid to their interpretation by the Assyro-Babylonians, is attested by the very large number of tablets dealing with the subject found in the ruined temples and palaces of the ancient Mesopotamian empires.¹ These texts, which would seem to have accumulated from a very remote period, contain explanations of omens derived from phenomena of every description, terrestrial as well as celestial, and were consulted as the standard authorities, whenever, as often happened, such information was desired.

The astrologer Nabû'a doubtless had in mind a passage from one of these tablets when he wrote the letter here translated. At precisely what period this votary of astral science lived and practiced his art, it is impossible to say with certainty; but it was in all probability under one of the Sargonide kings. In two observatory reports published in The Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia, vol. iii. p. 51, he signs his name, "Nabû'a of the City of Aššur," the ancient capital of Assyria. In a similar communication (Harper, No. 141=K 481), he reports that an observation had been made, and that the sun and moon had been visible in the heavens at the same time.

The omen to be derived from the occurrence mentioned below was doubtless an unfavorable one, since otherwise the fox would hardly have been killed. That the fox, however, was not invariably regarded as a harbinger of evil may be gathered from two passages from an omen-text relating to the building of a house, published in Pinches' Texts in the Babylonian Wedge- Writing, p. 12. The first (obv. col. i, ll. 30-33) may be thus rendered: "When the foundations are laid, if green locusts are seen, the foundations will go to ruin and the house will not be constructed. If black locusts are seen, the owner of the house will die an untimely death. If either a fox or locusts (?) are seen, the house will go to ruin. If dogs and swine fight, the house will have a claimant (at law)." In the second passage, however, the appearance of the fox was regarded as a good omen, since we read (ibid. obv. col. 2, ll. 1 ff.): "When the threshold is laid, if a fox enters the house, the house will be inhabited. If locusts (?) enter the house, the house will go to ruins. If an ox, misfortune will overtake the house. If a horse, the wife of the owner will die. If an ass, the son of the owner will die," etc. The letter of Nabû'a (K 551; Harper, No. 142) may be translated as follows:

Balasi, the author of six letters published in Harper's work (Nos. 74-79), all relating to astrology, divination, and kindred matters, and also of a number of astrological reports (cf.; e. g.

III R 51, no. iv; 54, no. 10; 58, no. 12), was an Assyrian priestly astrologer who lived in the reign of Esarhaddon (681-668 B. C.). He was therefore a contemporary of Arad-Ea, Arad-Nanā, and Nabū-šum-iddina, examples of whose correspondence are given in this paper, Nos. 8, 13, 14 and 15.

The letter of Balasi and his colleague Nabū-akhe-erba which is selected for translation here is evidently in answer to a communication from the king, who desired to be informed as to the advisability of a journey contemplated for his son Ašur-mukīn-pale'a, and the most auspicious occasion for setting out upon it. The answer is favorable; the journey may be undertaken, and though the second of the month will do very well, the fourth is particularly recommended. It may be that the prince was in ill health, and that this was the occasion of the intended journey. The physician Arad-Nanā mentions Ašur-mukīn-pale'a in terms which would indicate that he was suffering from some malady (see p. 161). This text, which is published in Harper's Letters (No. 77), may be translated as follows:

Arad-Ea ("Servant of Ea"), the writer of K 1024, was a priest and astrologer who flourished in the reign of Esarhaddon (681-668 B. C.). He is mentioned as exercising priestly functions in a letter of the astrologer, Marduk-šakin-šum ("Merodach appoints a name"); see Harper, No. 23=K 602, obv. 19; and his name occurs in another letter of the same writer, in which the prince (i. e. Sardanapallus) and his brother Šamaš-šum-ukīn are also mentioned (Harper, No. 24=K 626, obv. 5, 6, no. 20). He also appears (Harper, No. 16=K 1498) as the joint author of an address to the king in company with his colleagues Rammān-šum-uḡur ("Ramman protect the name"), Ištar-šum-ereš ("Ištar has willed a name"), and Akkullānu, all of whom are known to have lived in the reign of Esarhaddon. His functions are more precisely indicated by the fact that he is the author of a letter to the king on religious ceremonies (K 1204) and of an astrological report (K 1405). He is doubtless to be identified with the priest bearing the same name who appears in a list of officials of the reign of Esarhaddon (PSBA., May, 1889, pl. iv. col. 1, 29).

In Harper's Letters, four letters (Nos. 27-30) are published under the name of Arad-Ea, but the last of these (No. 30=K 7426) must have been written by a person of the same name of an earlier date. It is addressed (obv. 2) to King Sargon (reigned 722-705); is written in the Babylonian, while the other three are in the Assyrian character; and differs also in the formula of greeting with which it begins. Of the remaining three, one (No. 27=K 1022) is entirely lost after the initial complimentary phrases, which are practically identical in all three, and another (No. 29=K 1204) is too badly damaged to admit of translation. Of the third (No. 28=K 1024), the last line of the obverse and the first two lines of the reverse are almost entirely obliterated, but the sense, if not the exact words, of what has been lost may be easily supplied from the context. The letter conveys to the king, who was apparently afflicted with some illness, the assurance that, by the will of the gods, he will certainly recover and live for many years to come, to which desirable end the prayers of the writer shall not be wanting.

According to the statement of Herodotus (i. 197), the Babylonians did not employ physicians, but brought their sick to the market-place in order to receive the advice of such persons as might be able to suggest a remedy derived from their personal experience or from that of their friends. The statement is entirely erroneous. The fact that physicians existed and were held in high esteem both in Assyria and Babylonia is abundantly attested by the cuneiform inscriptions. They belonged to the priestly class, and in their practice combined magic with more rational methods.

It was the belief that sickness was due to the agency of demons or evil spirits, which invaded the body of an individual and produced all manner of diseases. A large number of charms and incantations have been found, having for their object the expulsion of the malevolent spirits and the restoration of the sufferer. Most of these charms are fantastic in the extreme, but occasionally the magical formula veils a really sensible prescription. For example, in the Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia, vol. iv. p. 29* (4C, col. ii, rev. ll. 6-8), is a charm for the cure of a disease of the eyes, which directs the application of crushed palm-bark; and it is immediately followed (ll. 10-20) by another, in which ground bark is recommended as a remedy for the same affection. In both these cases it is evident that the virtue of the charm lies in the astringent application recommended; it is, in fact, a measure very similar to the use of tea-leaves, a well known household remedy frequently resorted to in cases of inflamed eyes.

Among the epistolary tablets are a few letters from physicians, and from these also it may be gathered that these ancient practitioners did not entirely depend upon magic arts, as may be seen from the two examples here presented. The writer, in both cases, is Arad-Nanā ("Servant of Nanā"), who flourished in the reign of Esarhaddon (681-668 B. C.), and was probably court physician of that monarch. Four of his letters are published in Harper's work (No. 108-111.) In one of these (K 532, obv. 8, rev. 11) he refers to Ašur-mukin-pale'a ("Ašur establishes my reign"), a younger son of Esarhaddon and brother of Sardanapallus, and assures the king that he need be under no apprehension (obv. 11) as to the health of the prince, who seems to have been under his professional care. In another (K 576) he directs the king to anoint himself as a precaution against draughts, to drink pure water, and to wash his hands frequently in a bowl (rev. 4-10).

The letter which follows is published, with translation, transliteration, and commentary, by S. A. Smith in his Keilschrifttexte Assurbanipals (ii. 58-63).¹ Mr. Smith considers that the disease was hardly a natural one, but that the patient had received one, or perhaps several wounds, one of which, affecting the head, was likely to prove mortal (p. 58). The original, however, contains no mention of a wound, nor does Arad-Nanâ seem to have any apprehension as to the result. The case, in fact, would rather seem to have been one of ophthalmia or, more probably, facial erysipelas,² which, however, was taking a favorable course—so favorable indeed that Arad-Nanâ feels compelled to attribute it to the special interposition of some god who had interested himself in the matter. The prognosis is therefore excellent, and the complete recovery of the patient may be expected in the course of seven or eight days. The invocation to the deities Adar and Gula in the formula of salutation, is usually found in letters written by physicians, these divinities being the special patrons of the healing art. The letter may be translated as follows :

TRANSLATION.

To the king, my lord, thy servant Arad-Nanâ ! A hearty greeting to my lord the king ! May the deities Adar and Gula grant health of mind and body to my lord the king !

All goes well in regard to that poor fellow whose eyes are diseased. I had applied a dressing covering his face. Yesterday, towards evening, undoing the bandage which held it (in place), I removed the dressing. There was pus upon the dressing the size of the tip of the little finger. If any of thy gods has put his hand to the matter, that (god) must surely have given express commands.³ All is well. Let the heart of my lord the king be of good cheer ! The following letter, K 519, also from Arad-Nanā to his royal patron Esarhaddon, is published in Harper's Letters, No. 108. In ll. 9-14 of the obverse the context is so interrupted and obscured by mutilation of the text that it has seemed advisable to make no attempt at translation, and these lines are accordingly omitted. The reverse, which contains all that is interesting from a medical point of view, relates to a patient suffering from severe epistaxis. External compresses seem to have been applied, which are characterized as unscientific appliances, serving only to interfere with the patient's breathing, and valueless as a means of checking the hemorrhage. Plugging the nares is the proper mode of treatment, in the opinion of Arad-Nanā, whose letter may be rendered as follows :

TRANSLATION.

To the king, my lord, thy servant, Arad-Nanā ! Greeting most heartily to my lord the king ! May Adar and Gula grant health of mind and body to my lord the king. A hearty greeting to the son of the king¹

With regard to the patient who has a bleeding from his nose, the Rab-MUGI² reports : "Yesterday, towards evening, there was much hemorrhage." Those dressings are not scientifically applied. They are placed upon the alae of the nose, oppress the breathing, and come off when there is hemorrhage. Let them be placed within the nostrils, and then the air will be kept away and the hemorrhage restrained. If it is agreeable to my lord, the king, I will go to-morrow and give instructions ; (meantime) let me hear how he does.

According to the Book of Daniel (Chap. 2), Nebuchadnezzar placed the Babylonian sages in a most embarrassing predicament by requiring them to describe to him a dream which he had forgotten, alleging that their boasted science, if a reality, ought to be equal to the task, not only of furnishing an explanation in cases where the facts were known, but also of discovering the facts themselves without the aid of previous information. It is hardly likely that the two Assyrian physicians mentioned in the following letter were confronted with so difficult a problem as their Babylonian confreres of a later date, although in withholding from them all previous information in regard to the matter about which they were to be consulted, the king may have wished to apply a somewhat similar test to their science, and to secure from them a perfectly independent and unbiased opinion.

Ištar-dūri (“Ištar is my wall”), in whose communication to the king they are mentioned, appears in Harper’s work as the author of eight letters. All of them, except the one here translated, are either badly mutilated or merely fragmentary, but from what remains the personality of the writer can be established with very little doubt. In one (Harper, No. 159=K 1025) he mentions (ll. 4-5) “the cavalry of Nibe.” From the inscriptions of Sargon we learn that, on the death of Daltā, king of Ellip, a country lying immediately north of Elam, his two sons, Nibe and Išpabarra, went to war with one another about the succession to the throne. The former allied himself with the king of Elam, the latter appealed for aid to Sargon. Accordingly, in the year 708 B. C., an Assyrian army invaded Ellip, defeated Nibe and his Elamite allies, and placed Išpabarra on the throne (Sargon, Annals, 402-411; Khorsabad, 117-121). It was doubtless this Nibe who is mentioned by Ištar-dūri.

In another letter (Harper, No. 158=K 530), the name of Mero-dach-baladan occurs (obv. 22); and though the context is completely obliterated, it is probable at least that this was the Chaldean prince who made himself king of Babylon in 721 B. C., but was expelled by Sargon in 710, and took refuge in Elam—the same Merodach-baladan whose message to king Hezekiah is related in Isaiah xxxix. Nabû-zer-ibnî (“Nabû has created offspring”), chief of Ru’a, is mentioned in the same letter (obv. 4), and the people of Ru’a were one of the Aramean tribes who surrendered to Sargon in 712 B. C., and were joined to the new province of Gambûlu (Annals, 264–271; Winckler, Keilschrifttexte Sargons, i. p. xxxiv). In the letter here translated, mention is made of Šamaš-bel-uṣur (“Šamaš protect my lord”), who sends a communication from Der; and a Šamaš-bel-uṣur, who may well have been the same person, was eponym in the year 710 B. C. (K. B., i. p. 205).¹

All these circumstances point to the reign of Sargon (722–705 B. C.) as the period in which Istar-dûri flourished, and, as an Istar-dûri was eponym in the year 714 (K. B., i. p. 205), we shall probably not be far wrong if we conclude that the writer of the letters and the eponym were one and the same person. This identification was also proposed by the late Geo. Smith, who states in his Assyrian Eponym Canon (p. 85), under the year 714 B. C.: “Istar-duri, the eponym of this year, sent the two Tablets K 1068 and 504.”

The former (K 1068), as yet unpublished, is, according to Bezold's Catalogue, a letter to the king about astrological forecasts; the latter (K 504) is the letter which forms the subject of this number. It is published in Harper's Letters, No. 157, and also, with transliteration, translation, and commentary, by S. A. Smith in the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, x. pp. 168 ff. The version here given is offered as a substitute for that of Mr. Smith.

The city of Der, for whose temples copies of inscriptions are requested, was a seat of the worship of the god Anu, and was situated towards the Babylonian and Elamite frontier, in the district lying between the lower course of the Tigris and the Median mountains (Mardter-Delitzsch, Gesch. Babyl.-Assyr., p. 175). It must have contained a sanctuary of some celebrity, since the annotated Eponym List records that in the years 815 and 785 B. C. "the great god went to Der," which means that his image was carried thither in solemn procession. It is possible that, as was conjectured by the late Geo. Smith, Der is to be identified with the city of Dūr-ili, often mentioned in the inscriptions. (See Beitr. zur Assyriol., iii. p. 238, 42 ; 282, 42). For references to the city in connection with Elam, see the note on Šamaš-bel-uṣur above. It is to be hoped that the site of this city may yet be discovered, and the inscriptions mentioned in the text brought to light.

To the king, my lord, thy servant Istar-dūrī ! Greeting to the king, my lord !

I send forthwith to my lord the king, in company with my messenger, the physicians Nabū-šum-iddina and Nabū-erba, of whom I spoke to the king, my lord. Let them be admitted to the presence of the king, my lord, and let the king, my lord, converse with them. I have not disclosed (to them) the true facts, but have told them nothing.¹ As the king, my lord, commands, (so) has it been done.

Šamaš-bel-uṣur sends word from Der: "We have no inscriptions to place upon the temple walls." I send, therefore, to the king, my lord, (to ask) that one inscription be written out and sent immediately, (and that) the rest be speedily written, so that they may place them upon the temple walls.

There has been a great deal of rain, (but) the harvest is gathered. May the heart of the king, my lord, be of good cheer !

From a very early period the vine was successfully cultivated in Assyria, and the reports of modern travellers amply prove that the Rabshak of Sennacherib made no vain boast when he described his country to the Jews besieged within the walls of Jerusalem as "a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards, a land of olive trees and honey" (2 Kings xviii. 32; Isa. xxxvi. 17). Wine is frequently mentioned in the cuneiform inscriptions of Assyria and Babylonia, and was extensively used both for convivial purposes and in connection with religious ceremonies. Ašur-nāṣir-pal (reigned 885-860 B. C.), for example, makes offerings of wine and fruit to the god Ašur and to the temples of his land, to celebrate the rebuilding of the city of Calah (Asurn., iii. 135). Sennacherib (r. 705-681 B. C.), imposes upon the conquered Khirimme, an Aramean tribe of Babylonia, the payment of a tribute of wine to the gods of Assyria (Prism., i. 61). Nebuchadnezzar (r. 604-561 B. C.), the great Babylonian monarch who sacked Jerusalem and led away its inhabitants into captivity, offers annual apportionments of wine to his national gods (cf., e. g., Nebuch. Grottefend., ii. 32; iii. 15). And these are merely a few of the many instances that could be cited.

The ceremonial use of wine is depicted in sculpture, and frequently mentioned in the historical and in the religious texts. Thus, the liturgical text, K 164, referred to above, p. 154, directs, among other observances, the sprinkling of wine upon the couch of the god, and the pouring out of a libation upon the ground before it; Nabonidus, the last native king of Babylon (r. 555-538 B. C.) sprinkles with mead, wine, oil, and honey the temple of the Moon-god in Harran (V R 64, col. ii, 5); and in a sculpture from Nineveh, Sardapanallus (r. 668-626 B. C.) is represented in the act of pouring out a libation over the bodies of four lions that he has slain (Place, Ninive et l'Assyrie, Pl. 57; IR 7; cf. the frontispiece in Hommel's Jagdinschriften).

A reference to the use of wine on festal occasions is to be found in the fine address of the goddess Ištar to king Sardapanallus (Smith, Asurb., p. 65, ll. 65-67), when, assuring him of her aid and protection against his enemy Teumman, king of Elam, she bids him, "eat food, drink wine, make music, while I go and accomplish this affair"; and the same Assyrian monarch is depicted in a beautiful sculpture (Place, ibid.; cf. Mürdter-Delitzsch², p. 139), seated, in company with his queen, under an arbor of grape-vines heavy with luscious clusters, surrounded by attendants, drinking wine from a richly chased goblet.

It is interesting to note in this connection that among the ten varieties of wine enumerated in a list published in the Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia (ii. 44, 9-13), occurs the wine of Helbon, which is also mentioned by Ezekiel (xxvii. 18),¹ and that the same locality—the village of Khalbun, about nine miles north of Damascus—is noted for its vintage to the present day. The “receipt” of wine for the month of Tebet (January-February), spoken of in the following letter, was probably the produce of the royal vineyards for the preceding autumn, which, having undergone the necessary amount of fermentation and preparation, was now ready to be put up in leather bottles or casks,¹ and stored away for use. It is possible, however, that reference is had to a tax or tribute of wine, delivered in the month of Tebet. Of Bâbilâ, who with Bel-iqîša and another person whose name is obliterated, addresses the letter to the king, I am unable to give any information beyond the fact that his name means “the Babylonian,” or rather “devoted to (the god of) Babylon”—a name like Arba’ilâ, “devoted to (Ištar of) Arbela,” Mardukâ (Mordecai), “devoted to Merodach,” etc.

To Bel-iqîša are ascribed two other letters published in Harper's work (No. 84=K 117, and No. 85=K 613). In the former the writer complains that, having addressed some remonstrances to the secretary of the palace, that official had made use of very energetic language to him, and had removed him from his post in the palace to another situation much less desirable. The second refers to three officers who have been promoted by the king, but whom their present commander refuses to release from his service that they may assume their new positions. Both these letters evidently proceed from the same person, and stamp the writer as what in American colloquial language would be termed “a kicker.” Whether he was identical, however, with the Bel-iqîša of the present letter is not so certain. Several persons of this name occur in the epistolary texts, and any attempt at closer identification seems hazardous in this case. We need have little hesitation, however, in assuming that the communication was addressed to one of the Sargonide kings of Assyria. This letter, which is published in Harper's work (No. 86), conveys the information that the quantity of wine received in the month of Tebet is so great that the places of storage provided are entirely inadequate to contain it. It is therefore proposed to deposit it in the royal store-houses, which usually contained, we may suppose, only such wine as was specially selected and set apart for the king's private stock.

From the earliest historical times to the present day, the navigation of the Tigris and the Euphrates has been conducted in essentially the same manner. The round, shallow vessels of plaited willow described by Herodotus (i. 194) are represented in the Assyrian sculptures, and are practically identical with the modern kufa which eastern travellers describe as being in common use upon both rivers. The kelek or raft with a frame work of wood supported by inflated skins, is also depicted in the sculptures, and is still extensively used, especially between Mosul and Bagdad. Starting with its freight from the former place, it floats down the rapid current of the Tigris, and on reaching its destination is broken up, the timber is sold, and the skins conveyed by camels or asses back to Mosul. Representations of ancient and modern keleks, and of the process of inflating the skins, may be seen in Place's Ninive et l'Assyrie, Pl. 43; (cf. Kaulen, Assyr. und Babyk., p. 9) and an interesting account of ³ Literally, "hold up our heads"; nišši is cohortative, as also niškun (l. 8); cf. Del., Assyr. Gram. § 145.

* Dr. Harper gives some traces which suggest the character si, but might also lend themselves to iš. ni seems to have been omitted by the scribe, owing to the following preformative ni.

these rafts is given in Layard's work, Nineveh and its Remains (i. ch. 13; ii. ch. 5).¹

But, though extensively employed, as being well adapted to the Tigris, whose swift current offered a natural obstacle to upstream navigation, such clumsy rafts were by no means the only vessels with which the ancient Assyrians were acquainted. "Although," says Layard (op. cit., ii. ch. 5), "the Assyrians were properly an inland people, yet their conquests and expeditions, particularly at a later period, brought them into contact with maritime nations. We consequently find, on the monuments of Khorsabad and Kouyunjik, frequent representations of naval engagements and operations on the sea-coast." Several illustrations of ancient vessels are to be found in the same work (ii. ch. 2 and 5). One of these, propelled by four oars on a side, has a single mast, at the top of which is a crow's nest, apparently for an archer or look-out. The mast is supported by fore and back-stays. Both prow and stern are very high, the former having the form of a horse's head, the latter that of the tail of a fish. In Place's Ninive et l'Assyrie, Pl. 50^{bis}, a vessel of similar shape is represented following along the shore and picking up lions, which are driven by hunters from the brake into the water. This boat has two banks of oars, fifteen on each side, but no mast. Layard's Monuments of Nineveh presents (Pl. 71) illustrations of a number of vessels, evidently war-ships, having two banks of oars, and shields hanging along the bulwarks. Five have sheer prows and sharp beaks for ramming, and these have also a mast, a single yard, fore and back-stays, braces, and halliards. Ships are also frequently mentioned in the inscriptions, and an interesting text (K 4378) published in Delitzsch's *Lesestücke*² (pp. 86-90) contains an enumeration of different sorts of vessels and their parts. Mast, sails, yards, rudder, rigging, bulwarks, prow, stern, deck, hold, and keel are all mentioned; and among the different kinds of vessels the "Assyrian ship" is specially designated, along with those of the Babylonian cities of Ur and Nippur. It is well known that the cuneiform account of the Deluge contains a detailed description of the building of the ship which the god Ea bade the Babylonian Noah construct.³

At the present day the Tigris is only navigable, even for vessels of light draught, up to about twenty miles below Mosul, and thence to Diarbekr only by raft, and it is doubtful whether the conditions were much more favorable in early times. As far as Bagdad, however, the river is navigable for light freight-bearing steamers, and it is possible that the vessels of the ancients may have been able to proceed even further up the stream.

Prof. Haupt has called my attention to an article in the Daheim of March 16th, 1895 (No. 24, p. 393^b above), where it is stated that the African explorer Count Götzen, in the summer of 1894, crossed the rapid stream of the Lowa, a large tributary of the Congo, by means of a canoe and raft constructed of inflated goat skins. Consequently this species of raft seems not to have been confined to Mesopotamia.

Opis, where the writer of the letter translated below desired to establish a base of operations for his vessel, was an ancient commercial city of importance situated at the junction of the Tigris with the Adhem. It was conquered by Tiglathpileser I. about 1100 B. C.; and, continuing to flourish until a comparatively late period, is frequently mentioned by Greek writers (Herod., i. 189; Xen., Anab., ii. 4, 25; Arrian, Anab., vii. 7, 6; Strabo, ii. 1, 26; xi. 14, 8; xvi. 1, 9). Its ruins are still to be seen (cf. Delitzsch, Paradies, p. 205). It was to Opis that some of the ships built by Sennacherib in 696 or 695 B. C. for his expedition against Merodach-baladan were floated down the Tigris from Nineveh; starting thence, they sailed down the river to the district of Bit-Dakkûri, where they passed through the canal Arakhtu into the Euphrates, thus joining the rest of the fleet.¹ Bâb-bitqi was situated further down the Tigris. It is mentioned in a text of the time of Sargon (IV R², 46, no. 1, rev. 1) in connection with Bit-Dakkûri, which extended from the left bank of the Euphrates in the neighborhood of Babylon and Borsippa to the right bank of the Tigris. (Cf. Delitzsch, Paradies, p. 202.) It probably lay at the mouth of the canal Arakhtu mentioned above, which, crossing Bit-Dakkûri, passed through Babylon into the Euphrates, thus connecting the two great Mesopotamian rivers. Bâb-bitqi probably means Gate i. e. Lock of the Cut or Ditch.

Tâb-gil-Ešara ("Good is the shelter of Ešara"), the writer of the letter, was governor of the city of Aššur, and held the high office of eponym in the year 714 B. C. (Smith, Eponym Canon, p. 84). Thirteen of his letters are published in Harper's work (Nos. 87-99); and two others (R^m. 2, 458, 459) are edited by the same scholar in the Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, viii. pp. 355, 356, but most of them are unfortunately badly mutilated. One of them (K 507), which is also published in transliteration, with translation and commentary, by Delitzsch (B.A., ii. p. 32),² refers to a certain Nabû-bel-šumâte, prefect of Bîrat, who being obliged to repel a raid upon Sippara, has been unable to present himself sooner before the king. Another (K 656=Harper, No. 92) gives an account of a large quantity of heavy timber for building purposes; and building operations in the city of Aššur are mentioned in K 5466 (=Harper, No. 99), rev. 6 ff., and in K 620 (=Harper, No. 91), rev. 2 ff.

A most important reference, which places beyond a doubt the identification of the writer with the eponym of the year 714 B. C., is contained in the former text (K 5466) ll. 6-9: "Since my lord the king has given freedom to the city of Aššur, and its government has devolved upon me, I am repairing the palace of the city of palaces."¹ King Sargon repeatedly mentions the fact that he restored to the cities of Aššur and Harran their ancient privileges and immunities, which had long fallen into abeyance (cf. Winckler's Keilschrifttexte Sargons, pp. 80, 96, 146, 158, 174); and the building operations mentioned by Tāb-gil-Ešara were doubtless due to the desire of the Assyrian monarch to restore to the former capital of his empire something of its pristine glory. Tāb-gil-Ešara, who was governor of Aššur under Sargon (r. 722-705 B. C.), may well have lived on into the reign of Sargon's son and successor Sennacherib (r. 705-681 B. C.), and therefore it is not impossible that the ships mentioned in the letter may have constituted part of the fleet built by the latter monarch in 696-695. There is no record of the possession by the Assyrians of a permanent navy, and these vessels, having served the purpose for which they were constructed, may well have been either broken up or acquired by individuals for commercial purposes.

The following letter, which is so clear as to need no special explanation, would seem to show that Opis was considered a more desirable point for operating freight vessels than Bāb-bitqi. It is published in Harper's Letters, No. 89, and may be translated as follows :

Since all, or nearly all, the Assyro-Babylonian epistolary texts that have as yet been found are those which were stored up in royal palaces among the archives, letters of an official character constitute, as may be supposed, by far the greater number. But few letters of private individuals have been discovered, and those of women, of whatever rank, are extremely rare. In fact, I am only acquainted with two, and it is interesting to note that both are characteristic.

One of these, from an Assyrian princess,¹ a grand-daughter of Sardanapallus, conveys a rebuke to a presumptuous court lady who has been guilty of a flagrant breach of etiquette. The other, from a woman whose social status is not evident, contains an appeal in behalf of some unfortunate slaves who have claimed her intercession. She bears the name of Sa-ra-a-a, that is Sarā'a.² One is naturally tempted to compare this name to Sarai (שָׂרַי), the by-form of Sarah (שָׂרָה). Sarā'a would then have to be, not an Assyrian, but a Jewish name borrowed from Hebrew. The genuine Assyrian equivalent of Sarah (שָׂרָה) is, of course, Šarratu 'queen,' but in foreign words Hebrew ש or שׁ is rendered by s in Assyrian.³

The letter probably dates from the Sargonide period; and the fact that the Assyrian and not the Babylonian character is employed, as well as the title of the official to whom it is addressed, would indicate that it proceeds from an Assyrian city which contained a royal residence (Nineveh, Calah, Aššur, etc.). It is, of course, impossible to define the relations existing between Sarā'a and the royal secretary; she was possibly his wife or a lady of his harem, and certainly one who either had or was supposed to have influence with him.

The slaves appear to have been conveyed, at some previous time, to the governor of Bīt-Na'ālāni, whether by gift or purchase is not stated. The governor sold them to a certain Marduk-erba, and they, having reason to object to or dread this arrangement, applied to Sarā'a, begging her to use her influence with their former master to prevent the consummation of the bargain, perhaps by repurchasing them. The officer who had executed the bill of sale on the part of the governor was with them, ready, apparently, to hand them over to the purchaser in case their appeal failed, so that prompt action in the matter was necessary.

The letter, which is published in Harper's Letters, No. 220, may be thus translated :

The text of this letter is published in Harper's Letters, No. 219, and in Winckler's Sammlung von Keilschrifttexten, ii. p. 48. For the date, there is not sufficient evidence. The writer Bel-upâġ ("Bel gives heed"), M'pharr'shē and M'phōrāsh.—By Dr. CHARLES CUTLER TORREY, Andover Theological Seminary, Andover, Mass.

The publication of the Lewis palimpsest of the Syriac Gospels has called attention anew to the problematic ܡܬܥܬܡܐ, which has so long been the subject of controversy. The word first came prominently into notice when Cureton edited his "Antient Recension" of the four Gospels, in 1858. Prefixed to the First Gospel, in his manuscript, was the title ܡܬܥܬܡܐ ܡܬܬܬܝܢ. Cureton confessed himself puzzled by this, but proposed to read ? before *ܡܬܬܝܢ*¹ and translate, "The distinct Gospel of Matthew." Concerning this designation he said (Preface, p. vi): "It seems to me that whatever meaning is to be given to the word ܡܬܥܬܡܐ, it is intended to denote that, in some way or other, the Gospel of St. Matthew is to be regarded as distinct from the other three Gospels in this copy." He then argues that it is 'distinct' from the others, inasmuch as its text is superior to theirs, being probably translated directly from the original Aramaic of St. Matthew.

As might be expected, this interpretation of ܡܬܥܬܡܐ did not meet with favor. Aside from the objection to the reading ܡܬܬܝܢ (see note above), the theory of such a title of the First Gospel was too improbable in itself. Bernstein, to whom Cureton submitted the problem, preferred to translate, "Evangelium per anni circulum dispositum," i. e., divided into lections; appealing in support of this to Assemani's rendering of the same expression, ܡܬܥܬܡܐ ܡܬܬܝܢ, in his Bibliotheca Orientalis, ii. 230. But to this Cureton replied, that in his manuscript there were no traces of an original division into lections, and that therefore Assemani's rendering would be quite inapplicable.² This objection was very hard to meet; still, Bernstein's explanation was adopted by many, as being at any rate better than Cureton's.

The recently discovered Lewis palimpsest furnishes important evidence at this point. At the end of the Gospel of John there one well-known Syriac recension of the Gospels. It is plain, moreover, that the explanations of the term ܡܬܥܬܝܬܐ above noticed cannot possibly be made to apply here.

¹ What seemed to furnish ground for the conjecture was the presence of a small hole in the parchment at just this point, evidently made after the writing was finished, as it destroyed part of the last letter of the preceding word. But scholars since Cureton have been unanimous in the opinion that the remaining space is too narrow to have contained the letter ? See Wright's Catalogue of the Syriac MSS. in the British Museum, p. 74; and the fac-simile in Land, Anecdota Syriaca, vol. i.

One more attempted explanation of the term remains to be considered; namely, that defended at length by Th. Zahn in his Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons, 1881, p. 105-111;¹ also adopted, with some hesitation, in Wright's Syriac Literature, 1894, p. 8f.² According to this view, ܡܬܥܬܝܬܐ, 'separate (?) Gospels,' was employed as the opposite of ܡܬܥܬܝܬܐ, 'mixed Gospels,' a term used in describing Tatian's Diatessaron (see Zahn, Forschungen, p. 98-105). In support of this translation a single passage is cited, found in a code of church laws promulgated by Rabbūla of Edessa (412-435 A. D.).³ A long series of commonplace regulations for the guidance of the clergy contains the following: "Let the elders and deacons take care that there be in every church a copy of the ܡܬܥܬܝܬܐ, and that it be read." This is interpreted as an utterance belonging to the reaction against the general use of Tatian's Harmony in the churches of that region, as though Rabbūla would say: 'See to it that the separate Gospels are not neglected for the Diatessaron.'" ⁴

It should be noticed that this interpretation of the word in the passage quoted is not in any way suggested by the context. The rules immediately preceding and following are of the most commonplace character. If the word ܡܬܥܬܝܬܐ were omitted altogether, the passage would still read smoothly, and yield a sense well suited to its surroundings.

Moreover, ܡܬܥܬܝܬܐ would be a singular way of expressing the idea 'separate Gospels.' For 'separated Gospels' the expression might serve, though a little unusual. But there could be no reason for speaking of the four Gospels as 'separated'; least of all if they were to be contrasted, as the original form, with a mixture like the Diatessaron. The appeal to ܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ¹ is not justified. The Syriac has its recognized ways of expressing the idea supposed to be intended here (the opposite of 'mixed'), and the phrase under discussion is not among them.

Finally, Zahn's interpretation is disposed of once for all by the fact that the Psalms, as well as the Gospels, are given this same perplexing title. In Wright's Catalogue of the Syriac MSS. in the British Museum, No. 168, a copy of the Peshitto Psalms (dated A. D. 600), bears this superscription: ܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ ܕܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ, "Book of the [...?] Psalms of David." Wright translated, "of the Interpreters," or "of the Translators," but added that this would be a very strange title.

In the superscription of the next following MS. (No. 169) in this Catalogue, also a copy of the Peshitto Psalms, the word appears again, used in precisely the same way.

This seems to defy translation. These copies of the Psalms are not 'divided' into lections. They are not 'separated' or 'distinguished' from anything else. Wright's rendering, "of the Interpreters, or Translators," is, as he confesses, only a makeshift, lacking all external support or internal probability. Besides, the nomen agentis of ܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ would be ܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ, not ܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ.

It must be beyond all question that the use of ܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ as here applied to the Psalter is identical with that described above, where it is applied to the four Gospels. The fact suggests what is apparently the only solution, namely, that the troublesome word is simply one form of the adjective 'sacred, holy,' which so often occupies this place in titles of books of the Bible. That is, ܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ ܕܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ is equivalent to ܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ ܕܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ.¹ So far as etymology is concerned, the hypothesis has everything in its favor. In the speech of the Jews, the 'sacred' thing was that which was 'separated, set apart,' as the history of the root קדש illustrates. The root פִּרַשׁ also, in both Hebrew and Aramaic usage, furnishes analogies of its own, as will be seen. The single objection, which at once suggests itself, is this: If the participle ܡܬܬܠܝܬܐ was thus fixed in usage, in the signification 'holy,' how is it that so few examples of the usage have reached us? And why did tradition fail to preserve the meaning of the word?

Before attempting to answer these questions, there is another series of facts of which notice must be taken; namely, those connected with the use of the Jewish word מפורש. This word, which is in form the exact Hebrew counterpart of مفهرم, presents also in the history of its use and interpretation a very striking parallel to the facts above stated. The root פרש, in Hebrew, and especially in Aramaic, is in common use in a variety of significations corresponding in general to those belonging to the Syriac root, being all more or less directly traceable to the underlying idea of separating or dividing. In a single well known phrase, found not infrequently in the early Jewish literature, the use of the root has remained obscure, no one of the recognized meanings seeming to meet the requirements. How to translate the phrase שם המפורש, has been a much discussed question. Among modern German scholars, in particular, a good many different renderings have been proposed and skilfully defended, although no one of them has met with general approval. Thus: 'der erklärte, ausgelegte Name,' a favorite rendering since Martin Luther (see Buxtorf, Lex. Chald., col. 1851); 'der unerklärte Name' (see Z.D.M.G., xxxix. 543 f.); 'der ausdrückliche Name' (Geiger¹ and many others); 'der deutlich ausgesprochene Name' (Fürst,² Levy³); 'der nicht auszusprechende Name' (Grünbaum⁴); 'der volle Gottesname' (Wünsche⁵); 'der abgesonderte, ausgezeichnete Name' (Nestle⁶); 'der geheime Name,' a rendering which has had many adherents since Bar Bahlul's שם סודי (see Bernstein in Z.D.M.G., iv. 200).

The two words מפרש and مفهرم coincide, then, in the following particulars: 1. In form; 2. Each defies translation in a single fixed expression, where it is used adjectively; 3. The Hebrew adjective is applied to the name of God; the Syriac, to the Scriptures; 4. In the case of both words, the peculiar use seems to belong chiefly to the early centuries of the Christian era, after which it disappears, to be resurrected occasionally as an antiquity whose original meaning can only be guessed at. These coincidences are too many and too striking to be accidental. It is plain that we have here Hebrew⁷ and Syriac forms of the same word in the same unusual signification. That the signification is an unusual one, may be inferred from a glance at the partial list of attempted translations recorded above. Grünbaum, in his exhaustive treatment of the subject, reaches the correct conclusion, that מפורש in this phrase is an artificial word, coined for this particular use (l. c., p. 556). He remarks further, that it must have been intended to express the most marked characteristic of the Name (ibid., p. 545). But when he adds, as the minor premise of his argument, "Nur mit Bezug auf das Nichtaussprechen nimmt das Tetragrammaton einen höheren Rang und eine gesonderte Stellung ein" (p. 560), he seems to turn aside from the essential fact to follow what is only incidental. The Tetragrammaton was absolutely unique, far above all other names or words, because it was the peculiar name of the holy, unapproachable God. It expressed Him, and was invested with His own character. Above all else, it was קדוש.

Similarly, in the Christian church, the Scriptures, dictated by God himself, were holy in a way, and to a degree, that could apply to nothing else on earth.

That the Hebrew-Aramaic root פֶּרַשׁ was not infrequently used in designating that which was 'set apart, sacred, holy,' is a fact that scarcely needs extended illustration. In the Midrash Wayyiqra R., sec. 24,¹ the words of Lev. xix. 2, קְדָשִׁים תְּהִיו כִּי כֶּשֶׁם שֶׁאֲנִי פְרוּשִׁים כֶּשֶׁם אֲנִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם are paraphrased as follows: שֶׁאֲנִי פְרוּשׁ כֵּךְ תְּהִיו פְּרוּשִׁים כֶּשֶׁם שֶׁאֲנִי קְדוֹשׁ כֵּךְ תְּהִיו קְדוֹשִׁים. Cf. also the name of the sect of the Pharisees, (חֲסִידֵי) פְּרוּשִׁים. Other examples are given by Grünbaum, p. 556. There are not wanting passages, moreover, in which the Aramaic שְׂמָא מְפָרְשָׁא is used in such a way as to leave no doubt that it is intended as an equivalent, or something more than an equivalent, of שְׂמָא קְדִישָׁא. Thus in the Palestinian Targums on Ex. xxviii. 30, xxxii. 25, cited by Buxtorf, Lex. col. 2438 f., שְׂמָא מְפָרְשָׁא is used interchangeably with שְׂמָא קְדִישָׁא (וִיקִירָא). This is also the case in the Targums on Lev. xxiv. 11.² Another most interesting illustration, of a somewhat different character, is furnished by the Targ. on Judges xiii. 18: "Why dost thou ask my name, seeing that it is מְפָרֶשׁ?" The word here represents the Heb. פֶּלֶא, which is used as in Ps. cxxxix. 6 for that which is beyond the reach of human comprehension, high above all earthly things. Here, again, the idea is closely akin to that underlying the word קְדוֹשׁ. In this passage, מְפָרֶשׁ could hardly be called a translation of פֶּלֶא; it was probably suggested by שֵׁם הַמְּפָרֶשׁ; still, the two adjectives cannot be far removed from each other in signification, for the context, taken in connection with the evident meaning of פֶּלֶא, leaves small choice. In fact, this passage gives us unquestionably one of the best aids to determining just what the Jews meant by שם המפורש.¹ The word קדוש was applied to a great variety of beings, objects, and names. But the ineffable Name was more than קדוש, or at least, was קדוש in an especial sense; it was פלאי. Thus it came about most naturally that for the Name, separate and unapproachable in its sanctity,² incomprehensible to mortals, the special adjective מְפָרֵשׁ, Heb. מְפֹרֵשׁ, holy, was coined.

The borrowing of the word by the Syriac church, as a special designation of the Holy Scriptures, is one more striking illustration among many of the extent to which this branch of the early Christian church availed itself of Jewish instruction and Jewish training. This use of مَفْرֵش, however, seems to have been at least as short-lived as was the use of its original in Jewish literature. It was probably never very widely employed, and can have been actually current only during a comparatively brief period.

The disappearance of the word from usage and tradition, among both Jews and Christians, is easily accounted for. Being an artificial coinage, and belonging to a root employed in so many ways as פָּרַשׁ, its original signification easily became obscured, and it soon lost its hold. We have abundant illustration of the fact that the same form מְפָרֵשׁ, bearing meanings totally different from the above, can be used in connection with the name of God in a way that is most bewildering. Such passages as the Targums on Eccles. iii. 11; Cant. ii. 17; Lev. xxiv. 11, cf. Sanhedr. vii. 7; Jer. Targ. on Ex. xxxii. 25, &c., have often led investigators astray. In the case of some of these passages, it is difficult to avoid the impression that there is an intentional play upon the word. For illustration of similar possibilities of confusion in the use of the Syriac form مَفْرֵش, see the colophon to MS. Hunt. 109 in the Bodleian Library (Payne Smith, Catal., no. 7, col. 42), and the examples collected by Gildemeister, cited above.

Notes on Buddhist Art.—By Dr. SERGĖJ FEDOROVICH OLDENBURG, Privat-Docent for Sanskrit, University of St. Petersburg, Russia.—Translated from the Russian by LEO WIENER, Instructor in the Slavic Languages, Harvard University.

Editorial Note.

This paper appeared in the collection entitled Vostočnyja Zametki ('Oriental Notes') of the Faculty of Oriental Languages of the University of St. Petersburg, and was published by the Imperial Academy of Sciences at St. Petersburg in 1895. The Faculty's permission to print is dated August 25, 1894. My attention was first called to it by a brief report of its results in JRAS. for July, 1896, pages 623-627.

I had long been collecting materials for an orderly report upon the identifications of the Jātaka-sculptures; and this fact made me desirous to see in English dress the results of Dr. Oldenburg's studies. My wish was seconded by Dr. Oldenburg, who very kindly sent me a reprint of his paper. Such considerations apart, however, the publication of the author's results in this Journal seems amply warranted by their intrinsic interest, and by the value which they have, not only for students of Buddhist art, but also for students of comparative literature. What better vouchers could we have for the antiquity of the Jātaka stories than are the stone-cut illustrations of them which adorn the rails of the Bharhut top?

The paper covers pages 337-365 of the quarto from which it is reprinted. I have indicated the beginning of each page of the Russian original by giving its number in Clarendon type in square brackets in the translation.

The paper consists of two parts. The prior and more important one, pages 337-359, is entitled "On some sculptures and pictorial representations of the Buddhist Jātakas at Bharhut, Ajanta, and Boro-Boedoer." The second part, pages 359-365, is entitled "On Khotan bronzes from the collection of N. F. Petrovskij." This second part, for lack of space, we have omitted.

The thanks of the Society, and my personal thanks as well, are due to my colleague, Mr. Wiener, who with the greatest kindness volunteered to make an English version of the essay.—
C. R. LANMAN.

I. On some sculptures and pictorial representations of the Buddhist Jatakas at Bharhut, Ajanta, and Boro-Boedoer.¹

Buddhist artists began very early to represent with chisel and brush not only figures of Buddha, Bodhisattvas and other Buddhist teachers and saints, but also episodes from the last earthly existence of the master, and from the series of his former incarnations, the stories of which are told in the Jātakas. The caves, stūpas, and temples are covered with numerous representations of this kind; but only a part of these treasures is accessible to us in trustworthy reproductions; and of these, only a small part has been satisfactorily explained. In the course of my Buddhistic studies, I have had frequent occasion to refer to these extra-literary monuments, and have succeeded in ascertaining the meaning of certain representations, especially of the Jātakas. I here offer some of these observations, and hope in time to give a more systematic and complete investigation of the material at hand so far as it bears on the relation of Buddhist art to Buddhist teaching and legends. In these notes I shall touch on the stūpa of Bharhut, the caves of Ajañṭā, and the temple of Boro-Boedoer.

Before passing over to the discussion of the representations themselves, I shall make a remark of a general character in regard to such deductions concerning the antiquity of Buddhist sacred literature as are based on the extra-literary monuments and the inscriptions frequently found [338] upon them; I shall dwell upon the latest statement of the kind by Professor Bühler in his excellent article on the origin of the Indian alphabet known as Brāhmī lipi.² Professor Bühler thinks that the data given in the Pāli canon may refer to the fifth and perhaps even to the sixth century B. C. And then he assumes that the Pāli collection of the Jātakas formed, as early as the third century B. C., part of the "Buddhist canon" (which he evidently identifies with the Pāli canon), and that the latter was then "fully settled." As to referring the data of the Pāli canon to the fifth and sixth century, I shall merely direct the reader to the articles by I. P. Minaev, who has made a minute investigation of this opinion, and who, it seems to me, has conclusively overthrown it.³ In regard to the Jātakas I will say that it is impossible to combine the verses and the prose in them, as the prose, according to the testimony of tradition itself, belongs to a later time. The only quotation known to us from the Jātaka on a Bharhut inscription¹ is the beginning of a verse. Comparisons with Sanskrit Jātakas containing verses (the number of such Jātakas now accessible to us is very limited) prove that the Jātakas are almost identical in the poetical part, but that they differ widely in the prose parts in the different redactions. All that the presence of a Jātaka on a bas-relief conclusively proves is that the subject or the fable was known at a given time; but it is impossible to say what the form was, or whether it coincided with the text that we possess; the representations give us only a small number of details; and besides we do not know how closely the artists of that time were in the habit of following the text which they illustrated.² Thus, for example, it is difficult to say precisely why the artist in representing the Dabbha-puppha-jātaka, called Uda on the bas-relief (below, No. 39), has depicted a [339] hermit of whom the text says nothing, and why he did not represent the tree-god as which Buddha³ was then incarnate. Probably we have here really an illustration to a somewhat different text; and that such a one may have existed we see from a Tibetan text, evidently translated from the Sanskrit,⁴ which resembles essentially the Pāli version, but differs from it very much in particulars.

An incontestable proof that the Bharhut representations of the Jātakas do not form illustrations to the canonical text of the Pāli Jātakas⁵ we find in the following: one of the Jātakas is called in the bas-relief Yava-majhakiya-jātaka; there is no such Jātaka in the Pāli collection; but, as I. P. Minaev⁶ was the first to show, there is in the Mahā-ummagga-jātaka an episode similar to the one represented in the bas-relief. The difference in naming one and the same Jātaka may not be a conclusive proof, since sometimes even the Pāli Jātaka-manuscripts themselves give different names

² [Editor's note.—The Arāma-dūsaka Jātaka well illustrates how congruent in essentials and how discrepant in details are the sculptures and the canonical text. In the first version of this story, Fausbøll, i. 250¹¹, the king's gardener gives the monkeys water-skins and wooden watering-pots to use in watering the garden—in Pāli, cammaṇḍe ('skin-bags?') e'va dārukeṭṭe ca; in the second, F., ii. 345¹⁴, he gives them for the same purpose skin-vessels—in Pāli, cammaghaṭṭake; while in the Bharhut sculpture the monkeys are using earthen chatties slung in nettings.

Again, in the Mahā-ummagga, the virtuous wife puts the men, according to Minaev's version, p. 190 below, 'in a basket' (v korzīnu); and in the Kathā-sarit-sāgara, the prudent Upakoṣṭhā puts her four would-be lovers 'in a big chest with bolts' (mañjūṣā, etc., iv. 48); while in the Bharhut sculpture, xxv. 3 (see No. 5 in the List), the men have been put in three baskets.—C. to one and the same text; but the elevation of the episode into a separate Jātaka serves, in my opinion, as a manifest indication that the Bharhut artist did not have at his hand the Pāli text as we know it. The supposition that the Yava-majhakiya may be the name for the whole Mahā-ummagga-jātaka appears to me entirely incredible. If Hultzsch's identification¹ of the Kinara-jātaka (see below, No. 14) with the episode in the Takkāriya-jātaka (as opposed to its identification with the Bhallāṭiya-jātaka accepted by Warren and me) is correct, we still have a second case similar to the one just adduced. Sacred books, no doubt, existed among the Buddhists in very remote times; inscriptions and extra-literary monuments sufficiently prove this, but only this. We have no definite ancient indications of a canon or canons. We cannot regard the collections of Buddhist books [340] which have come down to us in Chinese and Tibetan translations as "disjecta membra of ancient tradition,"² because we do not know with what whole collection to compare them, since the composite Pāli canon, many parts of which are undoubtedly of late origin, can in no way in its entirety be the original old Buddhist canon, if such a canon ever existed.

Of all Buddhist sacred edifices, so far, at least, as they have been up to the present time investigated, undoubtedly the oldest is the Bharhut Stūpa, which was probably built in the third or second century B. C. [341] Along with a large number of other sculptures, it has preserved for us sculptured representations of a whole series of Jātakas; but of these at present only one-half can be explained. On some of these Jātaka-sculptures are inscribed the names of the stories which they illustrate; in other cases the inscriptions have been destroyed through the decay of the stone; and in others still there have been no names from the start. In some representations (the medallions), several distinct scenes are combined in one sculpture; and these we must carefully separate and analyze when we wish to explain them. So, for example, the coping-sculpture of the Uda-jātaka (below, p. 189, No. 39), which Cunningham, in his description,¹ speaks of as containing only one scene, contains in reality two scenes: namely, one in which the jackal decides the discussion of the otters in regard to the fish; and another, in which the jackal goes away with a piece of fish in his jaws. Similarly in the medallion of the Isi-siṅgiya-jātaka (see below, No. 9), we are to look not for one scene, as Cunningham says,² but for three scenes: 1. The doe is licking up the semen of the hermit which has fallen to the earth; 2. The birth of the boy; 3. The hermit is lighting a fire. In the representation of the Miga-jātaka (see below, No. 3), there are also three scenes: 1. The Ruru doe swims across a river with a man on her back; 2. The king starts out to hunt the doe; 3. The king speaks respectfully to the doe.

I thought it would be most convenient to make a table of all the Jātaka-sculptures and then to explain such as need any explanation.

The Arabic numerals in the fourth column refer to the current numbers of the Jātaka-tales in Fausbøll's edition or to those of Westergaard's catalogue (W.). The fifth column gives the names, as printed by Fausbøll, of the several Jātakas with which the sculptures referred to in column 1 are now identified. Stars placed before the numbers in the first column indicate that there is a note referring to that number in the Notes which follow the List.—Ed.]

Notes to the starred numbers in the foregoing list.

[Editorial Note to No. 3. "This is rather the Nigrodha Miga Jātaka, No. 12, as is clear from the doe in the front of the scene laying her head on the block."—Rhys Davids, JRAS., 1896, p. 623.]

Note to No. 5. This Jātaka was for the first time explained by I. P. Minaev, who gave a translation of the corresponding text. As the Pāli text is not published, I shall give here Minaev's translation.¹

"When they found out in the city," so it is told in the Pāli version of the sacred tradition, "that the wise man had run away, there arose a great noise. When Senaka and the other wise men (enemies of him who had fled) heard of his flight, they began to say, 'Don't worry, for are not we wise men?'"

"Without saying anything to each other, they sent each one a present² to Amarādevī (that is the wise woman).

"The wise woman took the presents and said to each one: 'Come at such and such a time.' When they came, she shaved their heads and threw them into the sink.

"After having vexed the wise men for a while, she put them in a basket. Having informed the king, and taking with her the four jewels together with the four wise men, she went into the castle of the king, bowed before the king, and then stood still.

"'King,' said the wise woman, 'not the wise Mahosadha is the thief, but here are the thieves, etc.'

"And then the wise woman disclosed how the adversaries of her husband had stolen the jewels of the king and had sent them to her, while they calumniated her husband."

Note to No. 6. This is, as has already been pointed out by Cunningham and Rhys Davids, the Mūga-pakkha-jātaka, i. e. the 'Jātaka of the dumb cripple.' Its contents have been given by I. P. Minaev.³ A translation from the [344] Burmese has been made by St. Andrew St. John.⁴ The Tibetan version was translated by Schiefner.⁵ On the bas-relief there are three scenes: in the first, prince Temiya is on his knees before his father; in the second, the prince is taken to the woods, and they are digging a hole for him; the third may be explained in two ways: α, the king is visiting the prince, who has become a hermit

² The presents were things that had been stolen from the king.

⁵ Schiefner, A., Tibetan Tales, 247-256. (XIV., The dumb cripple.) I cannot refrain from pointing out the incontestible connection of this Jātaka with the story of the prince, in the Arabian-Persian version of Barlam and Joasaf. Compare "Persidskij izvod pověsti o Varlaamě i Ioasafě," Z. V. O., iv. 243 ff.

(against this, however, speaks the fact that in the Burmese text, which is translated from the Pāli, the king visits the prince in the monastery); b, the prince goes into the woods to be initiated by a hermit (according to the Tibetan version).

[Note to No. 8. Cf. No. 4 in the Ajañña list, below.]

Note to No. 10. Dr. Hultzsch was the first to point out (Ind. Ant. xxi. 227, 239) that this quotation is the beginning of a first verse of the Pāli text.

Note to No. 12. See the translation below. I am not quite sure of its identification, as I cannot understand why the jackal is represented with one foot in the snare.

Note to No. 14. This Jātaka has been explained in three ways: Cunningham and Rhys Davids saw in it the Canda-kinnara-jātaka, No. 485; Hultzsch sees in it an episode from the Takkāriya-jātaka, No. 481, Fausböll, iv., pages 252-254; Warren and I see in it the Bhallāṭiya-jātaka, No. 504; the bas-relief represents the king listening to the complaints of the two kinnaras. The first and second explanations, however, are quite probable; only it is impossible to say with entire confidence which one of the three is the correct one, as the representation is not at all characteristic, and lacks all details in execution. I must here say that only a drawing and not a photograph of it is accessible to me. [The Canda Kinnara is also illustrated in R. Mitra's Buddha Gayā, plate xxxiv. 2.]

Note to No. 16. In this representation Cunningham and Rhys Davids and Hultzsch see the Dasaratha-jātaka, No. 461. I am not convinced of the correctness of this identification, and I regard the bas-relief as unexplained.

Note to No. 27. The bas-relief represents in two scenes the Camma-sūṭaka-jātaka (see below, p. 194): 1, a monk enters, a ram and a wise [345] merchant being on the scene; 2, the ram has butted the monk, who has fallen down, and the merchant is reading him a moral. It is curious that on the bas-relief the monk is represented with a burden; this corresponds to the verses of the Jātaka, but not to the commentary in prose. The latter not only does not say anything about the burden, but even says explicitly that the monk was begging alms, that is, that he went with a bowl.

Note to No. 31. I connect the bas-reliefs 2 and 8, and regard them as two scenes of the Miga-potaka-jātaka (see translation, p. 194): 1, the meeting of the hermit with the doe; the hermit has just entered the woods; 2, the hermit mourns for the dead doe; Sakka admonishes him. In view of such an explanation, I cannot agree with the identification of Hultzsch, who himself, by the way, hesitatingly suggests the Nigrodhamiga-jātaka (Fausböll, No. 12).

Note to No. 37. I see in the given bas-relief the Kapota-jātaka (see page 195, below), other versions of which are found also in the Jātaka, Numbers 274 and 375 and 395. Here is represented the scene in which the crow flies to the dove which is sitting in a basket, or else that in which the dove admonishes the crow that pretends to be sick.

A great number of the Jātakas which had been explained heretofore had at the very start been pointed out by Cunningham with the aid of Subhūti; these are those numbered in my table 1, 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, (according to I. P. Minaev's indication) 10, 11, 13, 15, 32, 43, 44, 47, 50; Rhys Davids was the first to explain no. 42; Warren, 39, 48; Minaev, 5; Hultzsch, 3, 19, 36: I was the first to point out 12 (?), 27, 31, 37; no. 14 is doubtful; it is explained in three ways, as shown above.

The greatest merits in the explanation of the Bharhut Stūpa belong to Cunningham; and, next after him, unquestionably to Hultzsch, who was the first to give reliable reproductions and readings of the inscriptions.

[Dr. Oldenburg next gives translations of the following four Jātaka-tales:

List-No., 12, Sandhibheda, Fausböll, No. 349;

List-No., 27, Camma-sātaka, Fausböll, No. 324;

List-No., 31, Miga-potaka, Fausböll, No. 372;

List-No., 37, Kapota, Fausböll, No. 42.

Of the second and fourth of these, Morris has given easily accessible translations (references below); and the fourth may also be found in The Jātaka, translated under the editorship of E. B. Cowell, vol. i. (by R. Chalmers), p. 112. For the sake of space, we omit these two.—Eds.]

Jataka of the Divider¹ (Sandhi-bheda), No. 349.

Once during the reign of Brahmadata at Benares, the Bodhisatta, who was his son, having studied at Takkasilā, came to rule [346] the kingdom after the death of his father. At that time a shepherd was herding some cows in the forest. When he was about to return home, he overlooked one cow which was with calf, and, leaving her, he returned home. The cow struck up a friendship with a lioness. Both became true friends and walked together. After a while, the cow bore a bull-calf and the lioness a male whelp. Both young ones became true friends on account of the friendship of their families and walked together. Once a hunter saw their friendship. Having bagged some game in the forest, he went to Benares and gave it to the king. The king asked, "Have you not, my good man, seen any miracle in the forest?" He said, "My Lord, I have seen nothing but a lion and a bullock in friendship and walking together." "Should a third one come into their midst there will be trouble. If you see among them a third one, let me know." "Very well, my Lord," answered the hunter. When the hunter went to Benares, a jackal began to wait on the lion and the bullock; when the hunter came into the forest, he saw him and thought to himself, "I shall inform the king that a third one has appeared," and he went into the city.

The jackal thought to himself, "There is nothing that I have not eaten except the meat of a lion or a bullock. I will put strife between the lion and the bullock, and have a feast of their meat." After having thought so to himself, he brought strife between them by saying to each, "This one says so and so about you," and he caused them to quarrel till they were like to die. In the meanwhile the hunter went to the king and said, "My Lord, a third one has come among them." "Who is it?" said the king. "The jackal, sire," answered the hunter. The king said, "He will put strife between them and will kill them. But we will arrive there when both are dead." Having said this, he seated himself in his chariot, went along the road pointed out by the hunter, and arrived there when they, having fought together, had already perished. The jackal, happy and contented, was eating, now the flesh of the lion, now that of the bullock. The king seeing that both had perished, standing up in his chariot and conversing with the charioteer, pronounced the following stanzas :

1. There was here community neither in wives
Nor in food, O charioteer;
And behold, this divider—
What a cunningly devised plot he has !
2. As the sharp sword into the flesh
So cuts the deceitful word,
For which mean beasts
[347] Devour the ox and the lion.
3. There will lie upon this bed¹
Which you see, O charioteer,
He who to the word of the divider,
The deceitful one, will listen.
4. Those men will prosper
Like men who have gone to heaven,
Who to the words of the divider
Will not listen, O charioteer !

¹ That is, the bed of death; he is thinking of the lion and the bullock who had killed each other.

Jataka¹ of the hermit in the leathern cloak (Camma-sataka), No. 324.

[This translation we omit—see above, p. 192.—Eds.]

[To the words of Morris's version, "The Teacher," etc., Oldenburg gives the following note :]

There is some inconsistency here in the naming. "Teacher" is used instead of "wise trader." As a rule, when stanzas are introduced by Buddha himself telling the story, this is generally indicated by calling them abhisambuddha-gāthā, 'stanzas pronounced by the Teacher after he had become Buddha.'

Jataka of the young fawn (Miga-potaka), No. 372.

Once upon a time, when Brahmadata was reigning in Benares, the Bodhisatta was Sakka (Indra). At that time a certain inhabitant of the kingdom of Kāśi went to the Himālaya, and became a hermit and lived on wild fruits. Now it so fell on a day, that he saw in the forest a young fawn whose dam had died. So the hermit took it to his hermitage and gave it some food and began to bring it up. The young fawn grew up and became very beautiful and comely. The hermit adopted it as a son and took care of it. One day the young fawn ate too much grass and died of indigestion. The hermit began to mourn for it, saying "My son is dead." Then Sakka, king of the gods, looking over the world, saw the hermit; and thinking, "I will admonish him," he went to the hermit, and, standing in the air, pronounced the first stanza :

1. It is not good that you having gone from home, and homeless, a monk, should mourn for one that is dead.

[349] Hearing that, the ascetic pronounced the second stanza :

2. From living together, you know, O Sakka, either with man or with beast, love springs up in the heart, and it is not possible to refrain from weeping for him (i. e. the dead, man or beast).

Then Sakka pronounced two stanzas :

3. They who weep for one dead or dying weep and lament [continually]. Therefore do not weep, O hermit. Wise men say weeping is in vain.

4. If weeping, indeed, could make the dead to rise, then we should all come together and weep for our relations.

While Sakka was saying this, the hermit came to understand that weeping was vain; and glorifying Sakka, he pronounced three stanzas :

² [Pāli sahvejessāmi nam, Oldenburg's Russian, usovīšču ego, 'ich werde ihm ins Gewissen reden.' It would seem to mean lit'ly, 'I'll stir him up.'—Ed.]

5. In me who was ablaze, like a fire besprinkled with ghee, as if sprinkled with water, you have extinguished all my pain.

6. The arrow which was fixt in my heart is torn out from me by you who have dispelled the grief for my son from me half dead with grief.

7. The arrow is torn from me. Without grief am I, and quiet. I do not grieve, I do not weep, having heard you, O Vāsava.

[Sakka, having given the hermit this exhortation, went to his own place.]

In explaining the numerous frescoes in the caves of Ajanta, I have come across a serious impediment, an almost complete [352] absence of reproductions, so that, in spite of the excellent descriptions of Dr. Burgess in his notes, I could be sure of the correctness of my explanations only in the case of a few scenes. These I shall here adduce. Many scenes seem to me familiar; but, as I have not been able to test my impressions by actual reproductions, I hesitate to publish these identifications. I hope the time is not far off when the frescoes of Ajanta will be published in reproductions worthy of the subject. [Amen and Amen!—Ed.]

3. The bas-reliefs of the temple of Boro-Boedoer.

1. LEEMANS, C. Bôré-Boudour dans l'île de Java. Dessiné par ou sous la direction de M. F. C. Wilsen, avec texte descriptif et explicatif, rédigé, d'après les mémoires manuscrits et imprimés de MM. F. C. Wilsen, et J. F. G. Brumund, et autres documents, et publié, d'après les ordres de son Excellence le Ministre des Colonies, par le Dr. C. Leemans. Leide, 1874. (Text, in French and in Dutch, and Atlas.)

2. IJZERMAN, J. W. "Iets over den oorspronkelijken voet van Boro Boedoer." Tijdschrift voor indische taal-, land-, en volkenkunde, xxxi. 261-268.

At about the time of the appearance of Leemans's book, the Batavian Society of Arts and Sciences published from these bas-reliefs 65 photographs, mentioned in the Notulen, xii. 71ff and 42ff (1874); see JA. 7. v. 569-570. To these photographs I could not get access.

³ In Burgess, Inscriptions, 81, note, there is a statement that Kshānti-vādin was the name of Gautama Buddha in one of his previous births. There are verses in the inscription which evidently belong to some version of this Jātaka.

Nor could I get the article by J. Groneman, "De Bâra-boedoer op Midden-Java." Voordracht van een leek voor leeken. De Indische Gids, 1887, pages 99-125.

Unfortunately, I am very little acquainted with the literature of the famous Buddhist temple in Java, since the majority of Dutch publications in which anything is said of this remarkable monument of Buddhist art are inaccessible in St. Petersburg. I nevertheless venture on saying something in regard to the bas-reliefs of this temple, since I have succeeded in explaining a few scenes represented on them which, so far as I know, have never before been identified.

I think that the majority of representations refer to the Jātakas. On the plates we may expect to find Jātakas in nos. XVI.-CXXXV. (lower row, even numbers); CXXXVI.-CXXX. (A and B); CCXCV.-CCCII; CXXLVII.-CCCLV.; CCC-LXXXIX.-CCXCII.

I consider the identifications which I give below, in the form of tables, as the beginning of an explanation of the whole series of bas-reliefs, which, I hope, will offer no insurmountable obstacles as soon as the whole material is at hand. In plates CXXXVI.-CLXX. (A), I think that I find representations of 34 Jātakas, arranged approximately in the order followed in the Jātaka-mālā, although a few scenes are not quite intelligible to me. The main difficulty which I see in this is that the artists have not always seized sharply the most important feature of the story, and have lost themselves too much in insignificant details. It may, however, be that they had a somewhat different text, although this is doubtful.

[The numbers on the left refer, of course, to the plates in Leemans's great work. The numbers preceding the name of the Jātaka on the right are the current numbers of Professor Kern's edition of the Jātaka-mālā in the Harvard Oriental Series.]
